ARMY DIGS FOR BURIED BULLETS

■ Worried PG man remembers hiding ammunition at Ford Ord in '50s

By LAURIE GIESEN

Bill Hitchcock (left) helped Army Corps of Engineers explosives experts Arthur Smith and Clinton Huckins (with metal detector) locate bullets at Fort Ord 40 years ago.

MANY LOCALS are worried about all the toxic waste and unexploded ordnance hidden underground at Fort Ord, but Pacific Grove's Bill Hitchcock is more concerned than most because he feels personally responsible.

Over 40 years ago, Hitchcock buried thousands of bullets in the sand near the Fort's rifle range, the same area designated as a family camping area in the reuse plan. Hitchcock is worried because the bullets he buried – when mixed with campfires – could cause devastating explosions.

From 1953 to 1955, Hitchcock was stationed at Ft. Ord while instructing trainees as a corporal acting field first sergeant. In an effort to avoid time-consuming paperwork, according to Hitchcock, he was instructed by his range officer to bury left over ammunition rather than return it to the munitions depot.

"Just before we were done at the range, we went to the officer to tell him what we had left in the way of ammunition and he would say, 'You know what to do with it.' So then we would take them (cases of bullets) someplace out of sight

Sunset may not have to be torn down after all

■ Effort seeks to rebuild auditorium 'within existing walls'

By PAUL MILLER

IN A bold stroke that its authors hope will lead — at last — to city-wide agreement about the future of Sunset Center, a team of consultants has been hired to determine whether the decrepit auditorium can be properly upgraded without being torn down.

The consultants have been retained by Sunset Center for the Arts, a non-profit organization that was formed in 1993 to work with City of Carmel on fund-raising for improvements to the venerable hall. Sunset Center — for many years Carmel's grammar school — was vacated by the school district and sold to the city in 1964.

The city council made a "final" decision earlier this year to tear down the existing auditorium and replace it with a "world-class facility." But that decision met with strong opposition from a group calling itself Save Sunset.

Just two weeks ago, Save Sunset announced it would seek federal designation of Sunset Center as a national historic landmark.

"Our board is sensitive to concerns expressed by persons in the community, and we know the City Council is as well. That is why we are willing to devote our own funds to take a look at an 'historic preservation' alternative in greater detail," a news release from Sunset Center for the Arts said this week.

And Nancy Doolittle, the group's President, told The Pine Cone that she feels "it is important to reassure the community that this option has been fully explored."

FOR CARMEL High School seniors Rebekah Green and Erick Pressman, volunteering is more than a graduation requirement; it's just part of life.

They ought to know; they are the winners of the 1997 "Spirit of Carmel" award, which is given to CHS students as part of the Halloween Parade-city birthday weekend. Together, they've clocked a combined 1,271 volunteer hours during their four years.

Both say there are countless hours they have yet to log in. But Green and Pressman aren't worried about recognition. They just quietly keep on doing the work they love.

"(Volunteering) doesn't feel like work to me," Green said. "It flows along with what I want to do anyway."

RAY AVERY, Jr., could walk into a room with no one he knew and he'd walk away with friends.

"He just fit in with everybody," said Pat Butcher, a longtime family friend of Avery's.

Students at Carmel High are holding a memorial today for the 15-year-old freshman who was killed in an accident on Carmel Valley Road last week. Students are also planning to put up a plaque in Ray's honor.

A Carmel Valley resident, Ray loved to draw and write poetry.

Memories of Ray's cheerful, easygoing attitude still bring smiles to Butcher and her daughter, Sarah, who grew up with Ray.

"He was getting good at finding his way around the valley," Sarah said. "No more, 'I'm up here at the Wagon Wheel. I got off at the wrong stop, didn't quite make it to the village.'"

"Little Ray," as his friends and family affectionately called him, wasn't so little anymore. Over six-feet tall, Ray "had a

Cycling for dollars: Carmel is first stop on 10,000-mile trek

By KIERSTEN MCCUTCHAN

How long does it take to travel approximately 3,000 miles — the distance from Bowmanville, Ontario to Carmel — on a $50, modified six-speed road bike?

According to John Veldhuis, founder of Haiti's only worldwide accredited university, it takes 39 days actually on the road. It also consists of 12 days rained-out and one day stuck with snow and hail. Then there are the flat tires.

Veldhuis, 60, has 7,000 more miles to go.

"Sometimes it's really rough," he says. "Like when I climbed the Continental Divide."

Carmel was Veldhuis' first of three long-distance destinations. The native Canadian reached the coast October 11 after leaving on July 23.

He is going coast-to-coast to raise money for the top five students at the Port-au-Prince university called Jacques Theodore Holly University to send them on the first-ever Haitian exchange program.

His goal is to raise $6,000 by Christmas; so far Veldhuis has raised $4,000, getting sponsored mile-by-mile. He heads south next, to San Diego, then hopes to reach Tampa, Fla. by February, then back to Ontario by July. He does not have a really strict time schedule; if something piques his interest, Veldhuis says, he stops his trek to find out all about it.

He rides between 60 and 120 miles per day and stays on state highways. He carries with him very little for such a long journey: a pup tent, some extra clothing, a sleeping bag, a mat and some food. Veldhuis says that what makes his journey truly successful is his faith and trust in God, who will provide.

"There are always many people along the road," he says. "One even stopped and tossed me a row of vanilla cookies."

Veldhuis chose Carmel, he says, because of a strong bond with Jerry and Marlene Harner from mid valley. They met in Haiti while they were working on various projects. They all developed a dynamic friendship.

Veldhuis says it is people like the Harners that have made his journey possible. "It's been a truly amazing experience," he says. Veldhuis has seen all the sights of America from the back of a bicycle and rates the different areas on different levels of their beauty.

"For sheer beauty," he says, "it is the mountains just west of Boulder. A place intuitively and intensely spiritual: Buena Vista, Colo. The deserts of Utah and Nevada are beautiful for the sheer heartiness of the people. I knew one guy that had to travel 60 miles just to get a loaf of bread.

But Carmel, the mountains, the beach, the people, everything — is "upscale beauty," Veldhuis waxes.

The journey has not always been a ride in the park, though. Veldhuis has encountered his share of obstacles, a pot-hole in Nebraska to be precise, that threw him from his metal horse. He skinned his elbow and got right back on. He says there have also been five drivers, all in Nevada, who tried to run him off the road. He laughs and calls them "beginner drivers."

For those that think they might want to try the same thing as Veldhuis, he says, "Go for it. You'll never be sorry, you'll meet incredible people — there have been friendly people all the way — see incredible sights and you'll get in shape."

Anyone wishing to make a donation or know more about John Veldhuis' Haitian Student Scholarship Fund, contact him at: 27935 Berwick Dr., Carmel, Calif., 93923.

Healthy Living

By JUDY HIGGERSON, RN
President/Owner Country Home Care

"Because October is National Breast Cancer Month, it's ironic that my breast cancer was diagnosed exactly a year ago. No one in my family had ever had it, so I'd been pretty lax about breast self-examination. Imagine my surprise when a spot on a routine mammogram led to treatmen. for cancer.

My life was topsy-turvy for a few weeks — I had some chest and arm muscle problems which complicated managing my husband's insulin shots — but time passes, and it's been a year now.

What made the biggest difference in getting us back to normal was the help we received from the Country Home Care staff. For example, their assistance with meals, my shampoo, my husband's diabetes problems, housekeeping and grocery shopping was such a blessing. Actually, my daughter back East arranged for the help; she's a nurse for a home health agency so she deals with this sort of thing routinely. She called Country Home Care at their Carmel office and made all the arrangements. She always was a sharp cookie!"

On Tuesday, Oct. 28, from 7:30-8:45PM, Dr. Laura Stampleman, Medical Oncologist, will present "Newest Approaches to the Management of Breast Cancer" at Salinas Valley Memorial Hospital. For more information, call 624-4663.

Transportation commission saves funding for parkway, while Potter to pursue "safety issue"

By PAUL WOLF

DESPITE SUFFERING a major setback this week, Supervisor Dave Potter said he will continue fighting for the ranking of public-safety above congestion-relief in county highway projects.

Potter presented that goal to fellow transportation officials in Salinas Wednesday and was shot down as the issue turned into a pitched battle between supporters and opponents of the Hatton Canyon Freeway.

Potter opposes the 2.8-mile freeway east of Carmel and believes available funds are better directed to the Prunedale bypass — the 7.5-mile runaround of Highway 101 designed to save lives in the county's biggest trouble spot.

The $43 million freeway is set to be funded by the state after designs and final approvals are in hand; meanwhile, the $220 million bypass remains unfunded, according to transportation officials.

Potter arrived at the meeting with hopes of pursuing an official county priority listing and the transfer of $31 million from the freeway to the bypass.

The supervisor, who eventually dropped the transfer idea, had proposed that the remaining $12 million from the freeway's $43 million be used to continue improving the existing Highway 1 route.

Over the past three-and-a-half years, only two of 12 operational improvements to Highway 1 have been completed.

Potter couldn't even get the votes to study the transfer idea and look at it again in December. Nine members opposed him (representing the cities of Seaside, Marina, Sand City, Del Ray Oaks, Gonzales and King City as well as Supervisors Simon Salinas, Tom Perkins and Edith Johnsen's substitute, Harry Allen.) The TAMC majority, including Chairman Perkins, criticized Potter for seeking to "de-fund a funded project" and risk losing the whole pot of money.

The seven who voted with Potter represented the cities of Carmel, Pacific Grove, Monterey, Soledad and Greenfield, plus Supervisor Judy Pennycook.

Potter, meanwhile, told the Pine Cone after the meeting: "I don't want to pit one part of the county against another."

That is exactly what supporters of the freeway accused Potter of doing. "Both projects are necessary," declared Tom Rowley, a resident of Monterey. "Don't de-fund one project that is close at hand to fund another that is a little further away."

Headed for trouble

The transfer of $31 million seemed headed for trouble when Supervisor Judy Pennycook, who represents the Prunedale area and supports the bypass, argued it was a bad idea that could complicate the goal of setting a November 1998 ballot measure to raise money for the bypass.

Also opposing the transfer was the very Prunedale-based citizens' group that is fighting for the bypass.

Although it wasn't enough, the strongest support for Potter came from Carmel and Pacific Grove's city council representatives, Marshall Hydorn and Robert Hewitt, respectively. Hydorn, a staunch opponent of the Hatton Canyon Freeway, agreed with Potter that the freeway was not as important as a "life-and-death project".

State transportation statutes declare public safety to be more important than congestion relief, but that policy does not come into play "with every case of new construction," explained Joe Lopez, transportation planning supervisor for TAMC.

Not breaking the law

Caltrans "is not currently violating the law" by finishing the designs and guarding the freeway as a fully funded project in the state transportation improvement program, Lopez added.

Lois Starnes, supporter of the Parkway for forty years, says that law has nothing to do with the Hatton Canyon project, because it is grandfathered in. "They keep on asking the same questions over and over again," she told The Pine Cone. "It has nothing to do with safety, nothing to do with Prunedale. All they are trying to do is kill the parkway."

Potter said he may take up the issue with the California Transportation Commission or ask county counsel to compel the TAMC board to develop specific transportation priorities.

Even if such a ranking is developed, it might not affect the freeway, but only future projects, Potter admitted.

Potter said some kind of high-priority status is needed for the bypass just in case the freeway — delayed over a period of four decades — never becomes a reality. "We have to have a fallback position for this money, or it could get taken away from us," he said.

But Starnes said the parkway's construction schedule has actually been moved up. "Caltrans has just told us they will be putting it out for bid in July next year, instead of September."

At the start of the TAMC meeting Wednesday, Potter seemed intent on avoiding strife and rising above the Hatton Canyon divide. But strife is exactly what he got, as supporters of the freeway accused him of "political maneuvers" and sending up "smoke screens," all intended to derail the freeway's current momentum.

To freeway foes, Potter was preaching common sense: State transportation law ranks public safety as the highest priority, so why doesn't the county?

"You have a gun in your hands and are pointing it (at the people who drive on 101)," said Ron Weitzman of Monterey, stressing the importance of the county's decision.

Hydorn, Carmel's rep on TAMC, said, "Safety is the preeminent priority. I would much rather put this money toward the Prunedale bypass."

Starnes said all the talk about safety was ironic. "We had people killed in traffic over here, too. But now that it's bumper-to-bumper, you can't get killed very easily."

Police & Sheriff's Log

Driver on crack cocaine arrested after hitting tree

HERE'S A look at some of the significant calls logged by the Carmel-by-the-Sea Police Department and the Monterey County Sheriff's Department last week.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 12

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Two motorists got into a traffic dispute at Junipero and Serra. First man thought second man cut him off when exiting Highway 1 onto Serra, so second man pulled his vehicle in front of first man, exited his vehicle and ran towards first man, who left the area and came to Carmel PD. Second man was located on Dolores and counseled.

Carmel area: At Scenic Drive a person reports that someone broke into the locked camper shell of her truck and stole a $6 dog leash.

Carmel Valley: On Del Fino, a woman, 26, reported that a man, 60, refused to pay back money owed to the woman's 16-year-old niece. Man agreed to make arrangements to pay juvenile back.

Pebble Beach: Man from Stillwater Cove reports that someone stole his eight foot "Quicksilver" inflatable boat and "Mariner" engine from the dock there.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 13

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Tourist sleeping in vehicle on Mission because he couldn't find a room to rent. Relocated to Rio Rd. & Highway 1 parking lot.

Carmel area: Woman with car parked on San Juan reports finding $1,000 of personal items missing from her car. She stated she heard footsteps outside her house earlier, at which point she phoned the sheriff. No suspects were found.

Carmel area: Woman placed under citizen's arrest by a grocery manager for petty theft. Woman placed in county jail.

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 14

Carmel area: Gas leak reported on Lincoln. Carmel Fire responded.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Contacted a woman on Lincoln because of a report that her dogs were barking. Her dogs were not barking. Nothing further.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Small gray dog reported running loose on Carpenter. Officer locked dog in its residence. Owners were not at home.

Carmel Valley: Search warrant served on married couple from Asoleado Road in Carmel Valley who allegedly had two growing marijuana plants along with numerous packages of dried process marijuana. Case still under investigation. Estimated value of seized plants: $20,000.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 15

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Man observed slumped over wheel of his vehicle in motel parking lot on Mission. He was drunk and was staying at the motel. He was escorted to his room.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: $600 necklace shoplifted from business on San Carlos near 7th.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Toyota truck w/camper contacted on Mission in regards to a possible Municipal Code violation. Man admitted to having parked more than 48 hours. He was advised of code and will move his truck.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report that a certain individual was in the area of San Carlos & 5th on Sept. 20 when vandalism was committed at a jewelry store there. Employee of gas station remembered that subject was in the area. Subject said he and his girlfriend are always in town late at night. Subject said he could've been in the area but denied committing any vandalism.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Complaint of loud talking at residence on Scenic near Santa Lucia. Several male subjects were leaving upon arrival. They had been visiting some girls at this location.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Man reports that he received a call at his restaurant from a subject stating he represented Carmel PD. The subject did not give his name and said he was selling ads. Man was asked to give $1,000 to place an ad. He said he received a similar call a year ago so he reported it. Was advised to contact police if this occurs again.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Traffic stop at Highway 1 and Carpenter resulting in field sobriety tests. Drive had been drinking but was not intoxicated.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Illegal tree-trimming reported by woman on Camino Real.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Dog tied on a rope in an open garage on San Antonio. No one home. Message left on answering machine.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: $400 worth of clothing shoplifted from shop on Ocean Avenue; also $82 worth of clothing reported shoplifted from store on Dolores.

Carmel area: Man from Handley Drive reports $107 in damage done to his PG&E meter by unknown person(s).

Carmel area: Local grocery clerk reported a person leaving in a small gray vehicle that had not paid for a couple of items.

Carmel area: Man on Robinson Canyon Road reports receiving a counterfeit cashier's check for the sum of $6,950 from a man in Los Angeles. A forgery report was taken and forwarded to LA Police Department/Forgery for follow-up investigation.

Carmel area: On Hwy. 1 in Big Sur a woman was reported to be refusing to leave a deli, throwing food and damaging property. It was later discovered she had not taken her medication.

Carmel area: A 23-year-old transient was found passed out on the public restroom floor of a local shopping center. He was arrested and transported to county jail.

Carmel area: Woman returned home on San Juan Road and noticed marks on her front door, but stated to sheriff that the door appeared to be secure. Also, nothing appeared to be missing or out of place. Woman mentioned recently she had had a falling out with a female live-in friend and had to change the locks, but that she did not think she would try to break in.

Pebble Beach: An employee of a company in Pebble Beach reports being battered by two co-workers in January of 1997.

Pebble Beach: A 14-year-old from Pebble Beach threatened to kill himself. Transported to CHOMP and placed on 72 hour watch.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 17

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Seaside man arrested for DUI at Ocean and Santa Fe. His car was impounded for 30 days since he was considered a habitual offender.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Woman on Scenic reports that a $10,000 watch is missing from her home. She suspects a workman who was on the premises that day.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Verbal dispute between Pebble Beach man and off-duty Carmel police officer. Man became verbally aggressive after rear-ending officer's private vehicle.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report that store representative on San Carlos felt that someone outside was "casing" the store. Was unable to tell office exactly why he felt man was suspicious. Man was contacted — visiting from Texas — no problems.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Several patrons were making too much noise on Junipero. Management assisted in quieting the masses.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of subjects inside a vehicle on Scenic possibly selling drugs. Contacted couple and their parents. No merit.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of paint balls being shot at residence on Scenic.

School candidates debate how to make most of CUSD resources

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WHILE SOME other school districts in the state have to contend with gangs, guns and vandalism, Carmel school board candidates counted the schools' blessings and focused their debate on how to make the most of the district's impressive resources: outstanding teachers, new computers and a long-range strategic plan.

"Indeed we need money, but it's not our most important problem," said Timmi Sellers, a registered nurse and actively involved parent. "All of the problems can be solved with a drastically improved communication process."

"Unfortunately not many people come to board meetings," said incumbent Dr. Dan Hightower. "It's a shame. We need to let people know the board is really interested in what people have to say."

Howard Given, an investment adviser, argued that school board members should make regular visits to the schools and offer an annual "state of the schools address" to the parents.

"We need to clearly articulate the strengths of the district and areas of improvement," Given said.

Joel Panzer, an environmental planner and small business owner, said he was encouraged at a recent open house by the teachers' openness to parents' concerns.

"The access is there," Panzer said. "Every single one of the teachers encouraged parental involvement."

Sellers suggested that the board start a newsletter, a web page and work with an advisory committee of parents.

Crossing the sea of technology

If communication is key to running the schools, then understanding how to navigate through the high-tech sea of the school's technology systems is just as crucial.

The two will lead a procession of fine cars during Saturday's Halloween parade.

Green spent untold hours doing missionary work in Mexico during last year's spring break and for seven weeks in the Philippines over the summer. She worked in a Manila orphanage helping to care for the babies and toddlers, some of whom had been found on the street.

"Those kids – you wanted to take them home with you," she said.

Green described her seven weeks in the Philippines as "a real eye-opener," a far cry from the comfort zone of Carmel.

One hundred thousand people live and forage in the "Smokey Mountains Garbage Dump," where all of Manila's trash is dumped, Green said. She accompanied a group that went to the dump and distributed blankets, towels and first aid gear.

After living for a whole month out of a backpack, Green was overwhelmed by her closet when she got back home.

"When I came back, I thought, 'Wait, I don't need all of those,' " she said.

"They have so little, yet they're willing to give it all to you," she said of some of the poorest people she met in Mexico and the Philippines. "They found an inner peace that we don't have in America."

Closer to home

After spending the last two summers volunteering as a camp counselor, Pressman was surprised to learn the impact he had on some of the young campers. On the last day, his campers told him, "You made my camp experience great."

"I didn't expect it," Pressman said laughingly. "Half the time they're griping at you."

At Camp Swig and Camp Newman, two Jewish camps in Northern California, Pressman did everything from cutting down bushes around the camp as the "Machete Man," to just making sure that the third-, fourth- and sixth-graders had a good time.

Pressman has also participated in a house building project in a dilapidated area of Oakland for Habitat for Humanity. Every time Pressman drives by the finished house, it's a special reminder that, "Hey, I helped build that."

Pressman, who doesn't watch much TV, finds that volunteering is the way to round out his life. Life as a volunteer can often be exciting as when he worked as a busboy Oscar Night at the Monterey County AIDS Project.

"I'm seeing what goes on, not what I'm used to," Pressman said. "Forty-six weeks out of the year, I'm not working with kids. I'd never been a busboy before. I'd never built a house before."

Pressman has performed in the rock band Torment for the last three years, playing what he hesitatingly referred to as "lead guitar." He can also "yell in key." While Pressman would like to pursue a musical career, he's also looking into the more reliable field of journalism.

But volunteerism will always be a part of Pressman's life. "I hope that when I'm out in the world in college or a job, there won't be anything that will prevent me from helping out," Pressman said.

Also an aspiring journalist, Green wants to find a way to combine writing with helping others. "I want to offer hope through my writing," she said.

She recently wrote an article for the Carmel High School newspaper about the struggle to survive in the world's poor areas.

But Green isn't wasting any time before jumping into her next project — an urban ministry program in San Francisco. "My heart is in the city with the urban kids, the kids who don't have goals," she said.

Big birthday bash Saturday

HURRY UP and get your tickets for Carmel's 81st Birthday Party Saturday. Tickets for the barbecue lunches are still available at City Hall, Nielsen Brothers Market at Seventh and San Carlos, and Two Sisters Design at Dolores and Fifth.

Mayor Ken White encourages citizens not to wait until the last minute to buy their tickets. "We will have only 600 barbecue lunches and once they're gone, they're gone!" White said.

Tickets are $10 for the chicken lunch and $3 for a children's hot dog plate.

The Halloween parade of costumed youngsters and city dignitaries riding in grand old open cars will depart from Devendorf Park at 11 a.m. and proceed down Ocean Avenue. The birthday party will start at noon in Devendorf Park.

Expect to see "a lot of Carmelites and the old timers," White said.

"It's an opportunity to see literally everyone sitting at the same table," said Sandy Farrell at City Hall.

Remaining tickets will be available at a booth in front of the bathrooms in Devendorf Park on Saturday. Last year's event was a sell-out.

SUNSET: Breakthrough at hand?

approved plan to demolish the auditorium, expressed unabashed enthusiasm for the new approach. "I recognize absolutely that changes have to be made to the proscenium arch and the sight lines. But all that can certainly be done without destroying the structure itself."

And Sales, who was the first woman to be a licensed general contractor in the state of California, said she believes that the cost of renovating within the existing Sunset Center walls "would probably be much less than a tear-down and rebuild."

One of the consultants hired to conduct the new study is Steve Pollack, a theater design consultant from Marin County. He said that the new approach would involve excavating the existing auditorium, lowering the seating area and the stage. "What we're trying to do is retain the exterior walls as much as possible. They might have to be modified but after construction the building would look exactly the same as it does now . . . when you drove by on Mission Street you wouldn't even know anything had happened," Pollack told The Pine Cone.

And the cost of excavating and renovating vs. tearing down and rebuilding? The new approach "certainly won't cost more," Pollack said.

Mayor Ken White is cautiously optimistic that the new approach will finally get rehabilitation of the Sunset Center complex underway.

Coming together

"If this can bring the community together to finally come to closure on doing something I'd be just ecstatic," White said.

But the renovated building would have to fulfill most or all of the needs identified in the Sunset Center EIR, White said. "Why go all to this trouble and expense if you only achieve about 50% of what we need?" White asked. "On the other hand if[the consultants] can come up with a solution I would be delighted . . . everybody would be happy," he concluded.

The "needs" White is concerned about include improving acoustics and sight lines in the hall, widening and raising the proscenium arch, adding wing space and overhead space to the stage, creating usable back-stage facilities, plus completely redoing the building's wiring, plumbing, heating and air conditioning.

The decision to demolish the auditorium and build a new one was made after the council determined, based on information in an EIR, that a new auditorium was the only way to meet all these needs.

But that EIR did not even considered the extensive renovation which Sunset Center for the Arts will now evaluate.

"I have every confidence we will be successful," Pollak said.

and bury them with a shovel in the sand," remembered Hitchcock.

He kept quiet about what he and others at Ft. Ord did with leftover bullets in the 50's, until he saw the reuse plot plan. "Right in that area was going to be campgrounds; campgrounds mean fires; fires explode bullets. What would I think if my grandkids were out there, which they probably would be because they are camping-type people? They could be blinded, and they could be killed from this stuff exploding," said Hitchcock.

On October 16, the former corporal showed safety specialists from the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers where he buried the ammunition. Arthur Smith and Clinton Huckins used metal detectors to try to pinpoint the cases of bullets that Hitchcock said were used for target practice in M1 rifles. Hitchcock was told that crews would be sent the following week to begin digging at the sites that he identified.

But temporary funding problems put a hold on the search.

Bill Collins, a member of the Presidio of Monterey, Unexploded Ordnance Removal Project at Ft. Ord, said on October 21 that they are definitely going to go back to the spots Hitchcock identified, but not until they get their funding for fiscal year 1998.

Responding to the delay, Hitchcock commented, "I'm sorry they are not going to do anything right away, but just so they get something done before people use it, that's what I care about."

All Saints' 6th-grader Whitney Jones

Hobgoblin cake waddle highlights Fall Festival

THE CREEPY castle maze is ghoulier than ever, and waiting to send shivers down your spine at the All Saints' Day School Fall Festival tomorrow (Oct. 25.)

In addition, this year's festival sports a haunted house, bewitching bingo, train rides, carnival booths and games, a hobgoblin cake waddle and a farmers' veggie and flower mart.

Each child in the school has produced creations for sale. This year they range from hand-painted chairs by the 4-year-olds to mosaic tile keepsake boxes done by sixth-graders like Whitney Jones (left.)

Although the student art is always snapped up by parents, there will be a wide array of hand-made crafts and goodies at the Country Store, including jams, pastries, and complete dinners. This year's crafts include handpainted frames and birdhouses, lavender topiaries, kitchen bay wreaths and mosaic flower pots. The public is invited to purchase one-of-a-kind holiday gifts at the Country Store.

All Saints' Day School, which receives no government funding, uses proceeds from the Festival for the school's operating budget. This year ASDS is also raising money to buy some of the vegetable farm next door.

"The idea is not to develop the land," said ASDS' Carol Hatton, "but to re-route our entrance to make it safer for the children to enter and exit the very busy Carmel Valley Rd."

The Fall Festival runs from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. (rain or shine) 8060 Carmel Valley Rd.

Convenience is just a state of mind

Coffee Break

By BEVERLY BORGMAN

WE WERE having our usual Sunday morning cup of coffee on the bench at the library when we noticed the young woman getting into her SUV — sport utility vehicle to those of you who still think in terms of sedans and club coupes.

Two kids were already buckled into the back seat when she turned on the ignition and simultaneously picked up her car phone and dialed.

We watched in bemused fascination as she then proceeded to talk on the phone while attempting with her other hand to extricate the vehicle from a VERY tight parking space. Back and forth, back and forth, never once missing a beat in the conversation, never once considering that perhaps the phone call might have waited, or her drive down the street might have been delayed.

Eventually she managed to get free, and to no one's surprise, made a rolling stop from Lincoln onto Ocean.

Our Sunday morning philosophical discussion turned to the issue of "Convenience" in the '90s. Obviously, this young mom thought she had the best of both worlds – a station wagon that looks and handles like a Brinks armored car, and a telephone that follows her everywhere.

More convenience?

No doubt there's a computer in her house too, complete with e-mail, that wondrous invention that was supposed to put the Postal Service out of business in a few years. What could be more convenient than being able to instantaneously send letters across the country or around the world?

Well, e-mail, for all its advantages, has turned into the world's biggest producer of junk mail. This morning when I accessed the Internet, I found myself just one of a dozen recipients blessed with an article that the sender found interesting. In case you are not a computer user, let me explain:

$5000 challenge grant issued for late school bus

STAFF REPORT

LIVING OUT in the country is not always a blessing for students who attend Carmel High and Middle School, especially if they want to participate in after-school activities like music, sports, or drama.

If their parents can't drive all the way from Cachagua, Big Sur, Pebble Beach or Carmel Valley to pick them up, they are out of luck because there is no late bus service to take them home.

That's why Nepenthe is putting up $5000 and challenging the community to match it to pay for a late bus to serve students at the middle and high schools who live in outlying areas.

"After-school transportation is a key factor in giving young people the opportunity to participate," says Erin Gafill, grants chair of the Nepenthe-Phoenix Corporation Community Investment Program, which is pledging the challenge grant. "If enough people get behind this, we can make this dream a reality."

Gafill says the response to Nepenthe's recent fund drive on behalf of the Monterey County Symphony was a tremendous success, raising over $10,000 for its campaign to reach young musicians. She's confident that donations to match Nepenthe's $5000 challenge will roll in again, to fund the late bus for students.

Anyone wishing to donate can make their checks payable to Friends of Carmel Unified School District (FOCUS) at Box 222700, Carmel, 93922.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

BORGMAN

The person sending the e-mail had, through the wonder of electronics, simultaneously sent a diet article to 12 people. It was old news to me so I quickly dispatched it to my "recycle bin" – a never-never land where unwanted e-mail goes. But more articles are bound to follow, particularly since the other 11 recipients may add me to THEIR mailing list when THEY have something "interesting" to share.

Last week a very dear friend sent me a long list of "blonde jokes." Don't get me wrong; I love this person like a sister, but it's time consuming to sift through such stuff looking for a real message. And I'd bet the rent that she'd never DREAM of calling me on the phone to tell me two dozen blonde jokes; she knows I'm too busy for such things.

Earlier this month I accessed America Online to find in my "new mail" an offer of photographs of nude under-age girls. I was invited to check out a specific web site for more information.

I don't think I have to tell you that I did NOT check out the web-site, but certainly, some people would. Instead, I printed out the first message, added a 32-cent stamp, and MAILED it to the District Attorney's office where people were quite interested. Interested enough to call me and say they were looking into the offer.

Admittedly, e-mail IS a marvel for some purposes. For example, I now email this column to my editor. Sure, he's only five or six blocks away, but we're both enjoying the knowledge that we're on the cutting edge.

Of WHAT we're just not quite sure.

Water-for-land deal could save canyon, but where will Mallery's houses be allowed?

By TAMARA GRIPPI

THE CARMEL Planning Commission decided that preserving four lots in Pescadero Canyon is important enough to leave the door open for four new houses to be built anywhere else in Carmel.

And property owner Tim Mallery decided that the water credits are valuable enough to hand over his property rights for his four Pescadero Canyon lots to the city.

On Wednesday night, the commission approved a "water for land" deal that allows Mallery to keep the water credits he'd already been granted for his Pescadero property in exchange for the land itself. The water credits are sufficient for four single-family homes or a lot of small remodel jobs.

"The value of water is actually quite high," said Planning Director Brian Roseth. "We view this as a win-win situation."

"If you spend three to four years and try to deal with an issue that can't be resolved, you have to get creative," said Mallery, who thought up the idea of the swap.

Besides Mallery's four, there are two other vacant lots north of Second Avenue near the Pebble Beach line. Kermit Dorius, who owns one of them, was also given permission to swap his water credits in Pescadero for use on some other lot, but he has yet to decide whether or not he'll take part. The "water bank" credit expires in 15 years.

Although the proposal has yet to be approved by the city council, many city leaders are excited about the idea.

"We've been talking about open space in Pescadero since I was working on the first general plan committee in 1979," said former mayor Jean Grace.

Grace wasn't worried about future open space encroachment from the water credits. They would apply only to areas that are already zoned residential, Grace said.

Mallery told The Pine Cone that he has no specific lot in mind to develop with his water credits.

"There's still not any guarantee that any project would get an OK," Grace said, noting that housing plans would still have to go through the permit review process.

Pescadero Canyon is in a deteriorated state, environmentally, Grace said. "It needs some clean-up, some exotic plants removed," she said, noting that the city didn't want to do the clean-up work until it had a guarantee that it would be able to keep the property.

This kind of exchange is unprecedented in Carmel, Grace said.

Local woman in paralyzing wreck has Good Friends Indeed

By KIERSTEN MCCUTCHAN

FOR ONE second, picture your life as it is right now. Now turn it upside down, conjure up the worst possible scenario and imagine living it. Truly, that is a definition of terror.

For Carmel resident Kay Villalobos, the worst possible scenario did occur. In July she was on her way up to Lake Tahoe for a vacation when her big Toyota Landcruiser was hit broadside by a standard vehicle near Berkeley. Villalobos' truck was toppled end over end and she was severely injured; her spinal column suffered a crushing blow and Villalobos — a successful entrepreneur and single mother at 42 — became a quadriplegic. All motion was lost in her four limbs.

What is perhaps more devastating than the paralyzing accident is that after barely gaining a hold on life, Villalobos was faced with many problems, running the gamut from emotional to financial. And with no relatives in sight, how could she now provide for her 12-year-old daughter, Meece? She thought she might lose her.

She's the reason

Cass Antle, a friend and head of the Good Friends Indeed Foundation, organized for Villalobos' benefit, says, "I think Meece is the reason she fought to live."

Villalobos' medical bills from her stay at Santa Clara Valley Medical Center reach over the $2 million mark — her monthly bills alone are over $7,000, and Villalobos did not have insurance. She never owned a home (which could have provided a cushion since it could not have been taken away from a debilitated individual) and the closest family she and her daughter have is Villalobos' mother in Canada. All of these factors, compounded by no income, culminated in what Antle describes as "severe reality."

It has been next to impossible to find Villalobos an affordable house with no stairs, one level, facilities accessible, and with a room for her daughter.

Antle explains, "It's all about the big, green dollar. For so many months Kay was just learning how to breathe. Medi-Cal has offered her a bed in a convalescent home, but it would mean splitting mother and daughter apart. They can't take care of that kind of thing for you."

Antle says Good Friends Indeed is working to raise money for Villalobos so mother and daughter can continue to live together, Antle says, "The most urgent need now is to pay her daily bills."

The organization has made headway: Villalobos now has a wheelchair-friendly house leased for her in the Mission Fields neighborhood, which Antle says has "embraced her." There is room for Meece and it is affordable, with a lot of help from friends. "People have been great, dropping by and leaving casseroles on the front porch."

Antle says it has been like this from the beginning, "Everyone – friends and businesses – are willing to help. To me she's an inspiration and a model single mother. She would be a hard person not to get behind, she always has her priorities in the right place."

PENINSULA'S 'LEGAL' WATER SHORTAGE WORSENS

■ With the state cracking down on Cal-Am, rationing may be just around the corner

By PAUL WOLF

THE DIRE predictions were made three years ago, but it was only this week that the writing was clearly on the wall: Those dark days of rationing, formerly associated only with extended droughts, may return with a vengeance.

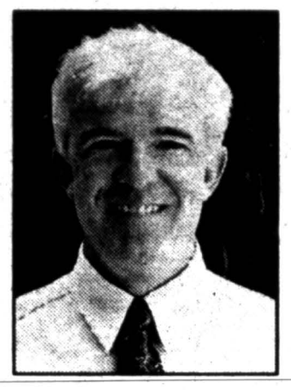
With Cal-Am facing a fine for excessive Carmel River pumping, and with stepped-up conservation measures in the works, the community is moving toward the unthinkable.

"Everyone has wanted to stay away from that issue because it is so controversial," said Darlene Burkleo, a director of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board. "I think we are going to have no choice."

The events of this week show that the Peninsula's post-drought landscape is beset by another kind of water shortage — the legal one.

What is clear is that Cal-Am and the district will not be able to come up with new water supplies fast enough to avert strict measures. Those measures are expected to make good on the 1995 state ruling that Cal-Am extracts 10,730 acre-feet too much from the river each year.

Dick Ely, Carmel's representative on the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board, told The Pine Cone this week that Peninsula water customers will have to get by with less for some time. "We will forever be under conservation of some degree of severity until we have found a solution to our ongoing problem," he said.



'We will forever be under conservation of some degree of severity until we have found a solution.'
— Dick Ely, MPWMD chairman

Future is written

With Cal-Am's new Los Padres dam and reservoir projects scheduled for completion in 2004, the shortage won't go away anytime soon. That will be the case regardless of rainfall, and regardless of no-growth and slow-growth policies in the county and six Peninsula cities.

In a related development this week, Cal-Am General Manager Larry Foy asked the water board to consider a districtwide moratorium on new water connections, which would affect property owners in those fortunate cities that still have a little water left.

Carmel is not among them, since it is out of water in all categories except for its community reserve.

■ SPECIAL REPORT

Cal-Am now has in place the largely educational "phase-two" conservation program. "Phase-three" — which restricts outdoor watering to only twice a week, rather than every other day as in phase two — goes into effect November 1.

If Cal-Am cannot save the state-stipulated 20 percent in November and December, it will have no choice but to request "phase four," according to Foy.

"Phase-four" conservation would include fines for water wasters who have received one verbal and two written warnings. Violations include watering more than twice a week and running the hose on sidewalks and driveways.

Foy said violators would be found based on citizen complaints. He noted, however, that the details of enforcement for either "phase four" or mandatory rationing have not yet been worked out.

Meanwhile, Foy is already talking about the likelihood of Cal-Am requesting mandatory rationing from the state Public Utilities Commission to avoid future fines.

Price of failure

It was "absolutely a surprise," Foy recalled, to learn Monday that the staff of the State Water Resources Control Board was imposing a $168,000 fine because the water company's 37,000 rate payers failed to reduce water by 20 percent over the past year.

The $168,000 fine represents a $500 a day for 336 days of water year 1997 (which ended last month), Foy explained.

Cal-Am plans to appeal the fine to the state board, which has the power to review its staff's decision. Foy said he is troubled by the size of the fine because the state conservation order asking for a 20 percent reduction was called "a goal, not a requirement."

Linda Morris, a Cal-Am spokesperson, said a rainy winter could forestall rationing because people would use less water. However, she and many other sources agree that a short-term reprieve won't change the long-term outlook.

Welcome back rationing

The Peninsula is no stranger to rationing, with its most recent experience dating back to the drought of the late 1980s and early 1990s.

The five-year drought that ended in 1991 included a 28-month period of mandatory rationing (20 percent), as well as a moratorium on new hook-ups. After the drought, the ethic of conservation remained in place, as Peninsula residents were averaging a 30-percent conservation rate without any prodding.

Two events in 1995 led to widespread predictions of future rationing. First, the 1995 state order on Cal-Am's over-pumping changed the physical water shortage to a legal one. Then Measure C — the $116 million New Los Padres Dam project – was rejected by the voters. (Water officials locally and at the state level said the dam would solve both the geologic and legal water shortage.)

Cal-Am has picked up the pieces of the district's defeated project, and is now pursuing the near-identical dam and river project on the river. As a private company, Cal-Am doesn't need voter approval, only that of the PUC.

According to Foy, Cal-Am was 13 percent over the target of saving 20 percent in water year 1997. "This community in the past has rallied, but this past year it has not given us an acceptable effort," Foy said, sounding more disappointed than bitter.

Foy noted that the lack of rain after January led to high water use in the spring and summer, making it difficult, if not impossible, to achieve the goal without rationing.

Ely said the state water board is likely now to get serious about its cut-back orders. "I wouldn't be surprised if this goal gets turned into a requirement," he predicted.

He also said everyone shares in the blame for not saving enough water. "The message we've sent (by not meeting the 20-percent target) could cause the state to come down with an even bigger hammer," he said.

Kids in PG, Carmel to Glow on Halloween

By KIRSTIE WILDE

FREE GLOW necklaces will be handed out in Carmel and Pacific Grove to trick-or-treaters on Halloween night, courtesy of The Pine Cone.

Publisher Paul Miller will deliver 2,400 orange and green glow necklaces to the police chiefs in the two cities Wednesday, and they will be handed out to local children from the Pacific Grove police department at Pine and Forest, and the Carmel police department at Fifth and Junipero on October 31.

Police cruisers from both departments will also be distributing the necklaces as they make their rounds Halloween night.

The glow necklaces help make trick-or-treaters more visible in the dark, and motorists are advised to drive with extreme care on Halloween to make sure this holiday is a safe one.

beautiful smile and he always had a twinkle in his eye."

Sarah had recently given him a new haircut that cropped the sides of his hair so he could slick the top portion back.

"He was a joy," said his aunt Sheila Bryant. "He was the spitting image of his father. He always had a smile."

Ray had lived in the Monterey Peninsula and Salinas areas for 14 years. He went to grade school in Salinas and Pacific Grove. He graduated from junior high in Atascadero before moving to Carmel Valley in recent months.

Ray was happy to be living with his father in the valley. "He loved to help his dad at home," Pat Butcher said. "He'd have breakfast for dinner waiting for his dad — eggs and bacon."

"We all loved him like crazy," said Ray's cousin, Alicia Gutierrez.

Pat was touched by the bond that Ray had with his father. "They loved each other so much," she said. "There wasn't anything either of them wouldn't do for each other."

"My brother didn't just lose his son," his Aunt Sheila said. "He lost his best friend. My brother just lived and breathed for his son."

Ray's upbeat attitude was infectious. "If you were down, he was always the one to bring you up," Sarah said. "I don't think I ever saw him upset."

His spiritual faith was an important part of how Ray approached life. "He had a deep belief in God," Pat explained.

Music was always a delight for Ray, especially "hip-hop music."

"He always wanted us to listen to all his songs even if we didn't understand a single word," Alicia said.

But Ray knew all the words, his aunt explalined.

"He loved to torture us with MTV — his music," Pat said.

Alicia remembers that Ray always wanted to get a blue 1964 Impala. Whenever he came over to his cousins' house, Ray wanted a chance to try out their car.

Ray's friendly spirit made him a favorite with young children. "Anytime he was around a little kid, he'd become their age," Sarah said. "If he was around a six-year-old, he'd become a six-year-old."

Ray left his family and friends with memories of a young man who would go out of his way to help anybody.

"It was a privilege to know him," Sarah said.

"He's always in our hearts," Michelle Sutton, Ray's aunt said. "We'll never forget him."

Ray Avery Jr. is survived by his father, Ray Avery Sr. of Carmel Valley, mother Angela Scheafer, of Atascadero; sisters Makaila Scheafer and Ashely Sheafer, also of Atascadero; grandparents Phyllis Baker of Salinas and Sheldon Avery of Sacramento and great-grandma Lucy Martinez, also of Salinas.

The Ray Avery, Jr. Memorial Fund has been set up at Coast Federal Savings on Carmel Valley Road. Donations will help the family with funeral costs, and any remaining funds may be used to set up a scholarship in Ray's memory. The students' memorial will begin today (Oct. 24) at 10:30 a.m. in front of Carmel High.

The Golden Years

By Myles Williams

In 1938, Harry Callahan was an accounting clerk for a Detroit auto maker. He bought a camera and, with no training, became a pioneer in treating photography as art. Now 84 and living in Atlanta with his wife of 60 years, Callahan has seen his photographs exhibited in leading art museums. The latest show, in Philadelphia, displayed 120 prints from as early as 1941. The subjects range from weeds in a pond to many portraits of his wife, Eleanor. Summing up his long career, Callahan said: "I am as good as I have ever been in my whole life...well, I have matured a little bit."

New York City's Riverside Park is the site of a new stone statue of Eleanor Roosevelt. It is one of very few honoring an American woman and the only such tribute to a President's wife. More than 2,000 people contributed to fund the statue project. Mrs. Roosevelt was born in New York and spent many years there at different stages of her life--as a debutante, a crusader on behalf of less privileged people, as a newspaper columnist and as a delegate to the UN where she championed human rights.

ing community events. And net users will also be able to access other important Carmel web sites directly from The Pine Cone site.

"Perhaps the most exciting feature of our web site is the Community Forum," Miller said. "Whatever our readers are concerned about — whether it's Hatton Canyon, the Pebble Beach lot program, what's happening in our schools, or anything else of local importance — they'll be able to express themselves in the Community Forum."

The forum will be available 24 hours a day. Net users can post their opinions on virtually any subject, or respond to other users' opinions.

"It facilitates a level of public debate that just isn't possible now," Miller said. "Many of our readers are very opinionated on a wide variety of subjects, and we hope they will find the Pine Cone Community Forum to be a very productive way for them to let their neighbors know how they feel." Additional features will be added to The Pine Cone web site in the coming months.

Villalobos' daughter, agrees with Antle. "Kay has always been a person who helped out a lot. She ran a craft business and was very involved with the kids with that. She is a lively, spirited, fun-loving person. Since it is kind of a small school, when one of us is in need, the rest of us try to help out."

It was with this notion that Good Friends Indeed was created. On Sunday they are hosting a fundraiser for Villalobos at Chamisal Tennis and Fitness Club, where they hope to raise a lot of money. Antle says they don't have a particular sum in mind, "Anything will help."

Lee says the tennis event will be fun for adults and children, with enough room for 500 people. They'll offer everything from serious tennis clinics, taught by four peninsula tennis pros, to silly competitions like a fast-serve contest, a slow-serve contest, a Raise-the-Net-up-Four-Feet-and-Play contest and a singing tennis player match.

There is a barbecue with a wine-tasting from J. Lohr vineyards, more contests, doubles matches, face painting and a silent auction where everything from produce to hotel rooms will be raffled off. Lee says every single item has been donated, including the use of the Chamisal grounds. Also, he says, it is not too late to donate either time or goods for the event.

"We want to make it fun and happy," Lee says. "Like Kay."

Villalobos will make an appearance. In fact, Antle says, "It will be the first time she has seen more than two people at once since the accident. It is her 'coming out' party."

There's also encouraging news, Antle says. "She thinks she can lift up one hand."

Help won't stop at the fundraiser, either. Antle says she and Friends Indeed will continue to help Kay and Meece Villalobos. Recently the organization has applied to become a certified non-profit group in Monterey County that will be, according to Antle, dedicated to helping others like Villalobos, who are trying to cope with spinal cord injuries and continue to be responsible fo

Local school gets behind wheel of racer

By JERRY STEWART

DURING THIS weekend's Visa Sportscar Championships, many fans in the grandstands will be wondering what it feels like to be in the seat of a Formula race car.

Thanks to the Skip Barber Racing School, some of those fans, including local residents, can actually experience the thrill of being behind the wheel.

Created by former Formula 5000 and 1 driver Skip Barber, the nationwide 200,000 member school, which has a West Coast Laguna Seca base, enables aspiring car enthusiasts to learn the art and science of racing and driving techniques.

"We get everyone and anyone out here," said Shamen Force, the West Coast site manager at Laguna Seca. "It all depends on what the person's goals are."

With tuition fees ranging from $475 to $2,250, enrolled students can choose between focusing on racing skills or overall driving techniques.

In the racing school, a three-day course, students are taught a better understanding of the art of race driving through classroom instruction and skill applications on the track.

According to Force, this stage is where a racing career can take off for some students.

"It's an opportunity for the drivers to get their feet wet," said Force. "It's laying the foundation of experience."

Twenty-year-old Ryuhei Okada of Pacific Grove, who took the racing class in August, said the school has helped him get closer to his goal of being a race car driver.

"I like the speed of racing," said Okada. "I've been interested in racing for a while and getting to drive one of the cars on the track was a lot of fun."

The Formula Dodge that is used by students in the racing school is powered by a 16-valve, 2-liter production 4-cylinder engine which delivers 130 peak horsepower.

Offered in one and two-day formats, the driving school's mission is to enhance and refine the relationship between car and driver for maximum safety and enjoyment

Force said that students in the driving school learn skills such as threshold braking, skid recovery and accident-avoidance maneuvers.

"Some parents bring their newly licensed kids so they can learn good habits," Force said. "Also, we get wives

SPORTS WRAP-UP

■ IN THE FAST LANE: Craig T. Nelson, the star of ABC's hit sitcom "Coach", will be competing in the Exxon World Sportscar race this weekend at Laguna Seca Raceway.

Two years ago Nelson was honored at the IMSA Exxon Awards Banquet as the Most Improved Driver of the Year.

He began racing in 1991 when he competed in the Toyota Grand Prix of Long Beach. "Racing has given me a tremendous sense of humility," Nelson said earlier this year in an interview in the Robb Report.

■ ON THE TRAIL: Stephanie Stuart of RLS came in first in a Division III run (15:07) at the P.G. Invitational on Saturday. Teammate Mizuri Fujii finished in sixth place (17:07).

■ IN THE POOL: The CHS girls team cruised during a 13-1 win over Santa Teresa on Saturday.

Sarah Holine scored four goals for the Padres. At the Connolly Tournament in San Jose, the CHS boys fell 9-8 to Serra and 16-15 to Gunn in three overtimes. Hank Stoffers (7 goals) and Trevor Fogg (5 goals) led the offense while Chase 'The Wall' Mahoney had 18 saves on goal.

SCHOOL BOARD

Candidates argued that students can only benefit from technology if it's presented to them in a useful way.

"I think we need more access to the computers," said Reed Bunzel, the editor of a business magazine. "It's a fundamental element of everyday lives." Bunzel talked about the need for more computer training at the high school.

Sellers agreed that access to the computers is a problem, particularly at the middle school. "Only one-third of the kids here have access to computer rooms," Sellers said. "We're wasting our resources here."

Candidates viewed computers as an ideal tool to prepare students to deal with the "real world."

"The school district must prepare children for the future," Hightower said. "They should be well maintained, we should have technical aids to instruct and provide good curriculum about how to access information."

One way to provide the computer instruction is to bring the teachers up to speed on the latest technology.

"We need to teach students how to use computers as a tool and that falls on the educators," Panzer said.

Buildings and fields

Candidates agreed that repair work to buildings and grounds is a pressing need.

"In order for us to have high expectations, the community needs to know how our children perform," Given said. "If the schools look like hell, what kind of message does that send?"

Hightower said that the board had recently put $1 million into infrastructure.

Fields, recreational facilities and buildings all need more attention, Panzer said. Tularcitos has become somewhat of a "mobile school," with so many portables, Panzer said.

Candidates also agreed with each other that the most important resource for education is the teachers.

"You can put up with roofs gathering lichen and moss," Bunzel said. "It's the whole process of getting quality teachers and keeping them around."

Other candidates implied that the emphasis should be placed on test scores and curriculum before the grounds

"There are plenty of schools without great infrastructure that produce great results," Given said.

Water board clears way for car wash permit

AFTER MONTHS of confusion about the water permit for the new Rancho Car Wash at the mouth of the valley, the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District untangled some of the red tape at its board meeting Oct. 20.

The board cleared the way for staff to issue the permit if the car wash submits a new application, pays all fees due, installs another Cal-Am meter and permanently cuts all service from the master water meter on the adjoining property.

(There was never any dispute that the car wash had a proper water allocation; the argument was about whether it needed a second water meter and permit.)

Rancho Car Wash has been operating since Sept. 22 across from Carmel Rancho.

sent by their husbands and people who have already been in accidents who use the school as a rebuilding tool."

Brian Robinson, a 50-year-old Carmel resident, said he enrolled in the school as part of a corporate group which utilized the classes as business training.

"For us, the school and driving taught us the metaphor that sometimes you have to go slower to go faster. We then related that to business tactics," said Robinson. "It taught us teamwork and how to cut corners."

Robinson, who went to the school last spring, said he is looking forward to returning in December.

"You learn to drive more safely and effectively. Plus it's thrilling to be in some fast cars," said Robinson.

This Sunday, a few select graduates of the racing school from across the U.S. will get to attack the 2.238 mile, 11-turn course in the hills of Monterey during the Barber Pro Series Race.

"Racing opportunities open up for some students," said Force. "Many people end up loving the sport."

Carmel Performing Arts Festival an event to be proud of

For the lucky thousands who attended one of the CPAF events, the last three weeks have been a delight — a feast for the eyes, ears and mind that had to inspire even the staunchest Carmel preservationist.

And, amazingly enough, anyone who didn't attend the festival could hardly tell the mammoth, 22-day event was going on.

The first accomplishment is a testament to the skill and dedication of the festival's organizers — from dance to theater to music, these hardworking people know their stuff. Success naturally accrues to events of this quality.

The latter achievement — that the festival hardly disturbed our gloriously peaceful autumn — shows that the event's organizers also know and respect the beautiful and fragile village of Carmel-by-the-Sea.

Citizens of Carmel are rightfully skeptical anytime someone shows up at City Hall with a plan to improve things in these parts.

Perfection, as we have said before, is difficult to improve upon.

But love for the arts is as surely a part of Carmel's heart and heritage as any of the town's natural features or quaint buildings.

Recognizing this fact, the City Council welcomed the Carmel Performing Arts Festival to town — but with plenty of reservations.

Would the town be "taken over"? Would streets be blocked with crowds and traffic reach the breaking point? CPAF organizers knew that they were being watched for the slightest sign of over-commercialization or Hollywood-style marketing.

But, with the festival wrapping up this weekend, not a complaint has been heard in the land.

"It was a smash hit," Mayor White said. He personally attended several performances and said the festival was as good as the renowned annual festival in Edinburgh, Scotland (which White and his wife, Jean, have also attended). "The broad spectrum of performances particularly delighted me," White said.

Other city officials agreed that there have been — literally — no complaints about the festival.

Many residents hardly knew it was happening, except for coverage in The Pine Cone, one official said.

In a way, that's a shame because it means they missed outstanding performances by the Moscow String Quartet, Dr. Schaffer and Mr. Stern, Todd Jefferson Moore, Pilobolus Too, Peter Davison, Voci a capella, Pacific Repertory Theatre, etcetera, etcetera, etcetera. Saturday morning play readings at the Forge in the Forest Restaurant were a delight — as were the free events at Devendorf Park.

It can truly be said that out-of-town and local artists were all at their best in the Carmel Performing Arts Festival.

This happy relationship can persevere and add to Carmel's glorious cultural heritage. All the event's organizers have to do is stick to the formula that they invented and carried out so ably this year.

There are still tickets available for performances on this, the final weekend. And next year's festival — October, 1998 — is already on our calendar.

Ambulance measure "your life and mine"

Dear Editor:

Why vote yes on Measure "B?" Because if you don't, Carmel might have to accept the county's 8 minute ambulance response, versus our current 4 minute response.

Couldn't the city absorb all outstanding costs? This year for sure. Next year, probably. Thereafter, who knows? Unless you are a soothsayer, and a flawless one, you can't predict earthquakes, floods, recessions, Carmel's coffers, etc..

A few years ago, Carmel's finances were so bad that the city cut personnel in virtually all departments, including fire and police. Surely, ambulance personnel would have been next.

The proposed parcel assessment is merely an insurance policy to retain our current service. This year the projected parcel fee would be about $14.

Free lunches there aren't. Nor are there free ambulances. Vote yes on "B" and ensure that we retain the high caliber team that we now have. It's your life. And mine.

Hans Lehmann, Carmel

Parcel tax provides "stable funding" source for ambulance

Dear Editor:

In Barbara Smoak's letter of October 3 she stated that the Carmel City Council was asking its residents to pay $13 per household next year for sustaining its ambulance service. The $13 per household figure is what residents would be paying this year if Measure B (Parcel Tax for Emergency Medical Services) were in place and the city had contributed $100,000 from general fund monies toward the cost of ambulance service.

If Measure B passes November 4, the City Council will determine in July, 1998,

New Salvation Army Center to help move poor from welfare to work

By PAUL WOLF

THE NEW Good Samaritan Center in Sand City opens today, to serve the legions of people who are being dropped from state and federal welfare rolls and help them find work.

The center, run and financed by the Salvation Army, will also focus on providing a variety of counseling services designed to further the independence of the homeless and others in need, according to Elizabeth Duran, the homeless case coordinator, who will work out of the newly remodeled building at 800 Scott Street.

"We are giving people the help they need to get back in the mainstream," Duran said.

The social service functions of the Salvation Army have been growing even in advance of the welfare-reform fallout, according to Erica Chafin, the development director's assistant.

The 7,000 square-foot center has been described as a complete, "one-stop" facility for the homeless and others in crisis. It will house employment and substance-abuse counselors, computers to help in writing resumés, post office boxes and voice mail machines to give people a link with the outside world, and additional amenities like showers.

The Salvation Army's main center, which has for many years offered food, clothing and shelter to the destitute, will remain open at 1491 Contra Costa in Seaside.

Today's open house is from 4 to 7 p.m., with the dedication of the new facility taking place at 5 p.m.

Honored as Monterey Peninsula's premier "Good Samaritan" will be the late Gerald David Lloyd, who was killed by sniper fire at Fort Or last June, when he went to the aid of a wounded man. The Lloyd family will participate in today's dedication.

The new facility is made possible through the support of the Packard Foundation, Pacific Gas and Electric Co. and other contributors.

The public is invited to the Open House. Call 899-4911 for information.

Violinist Gil Shaham opens Carmel Music Society's 71st season Tuesday

VETERAN VIOLIN virtuoso Gil Shaham, who has been heard in concert in the music capitals of the world, will appear at 8 p.m. Tuesday on the Sunset Theater stage as the first performer in the Carmel Music Society's 71st season.

Shaham, who plays a 1699 Stradivarius, was born in the United States in 1971, moved to Israel at the age of 7, and two years later made his debuts with the Jerusalem Symphony and the Israel Philharmonic. He was awarded the Avery Fisher Career Grant in 1990.

Known for his spontaneous style, Shaham has been lauded by critics for the "huge, soulful tone" he achieves in concert.

Gil Shaham

The program will include works by Schubert, Faure, Prokofiev, Prihoda, Copland and a Carmen Fantasy arranged by Shaham/Eguchi. Akira Eguchi, pianist, will accompany Shaham.

Although subscription renewals were closed in June, new subscription requests are filled in order received and range from $105 to $140. Single tickets are from $15 to $35 and a student discount is available. Tickets may be purchased at the Sunset box office. For information, call 625-9938.

What led up to the crash?

IF YOU can believe them — and it's not always easy when their forte seems to be sensationalism, first and foremost — the supermarket tabloids are telling a more liquid tale than local media did about the tragic John Denver air crash.

LOCAL TV stations and the Knight-Ridder paper in Monterey reported Denver had played golf in the morning with friends at Spyglass Hill that fateful Sunday, several of whom said Denver didn't have anything alcoholic to drink while on the course or in their presence afterward.

The Globe tabloid this week, however, quotes unnamed sources saying he did.

IT said that Denver, indeed, played 18 holes with friends, but then after their round they went into the clubhouse bar about 12:50 p.m. and drank beer.

Denver left after awhile but came back at 2:30 p.m. and they all ate lunch and shared a bottle of chardonnay. "John had at least one glass," the tabloid said, before he drove to Monterey Airport,

CARMEL PERFORMING ARTS FESTIVAL UPDATE

Fourteen more performances to go before the festival curtains ring down

By MARGOT PETIT NICHOLS

TODAY AND tomorrow — and that's it for this year: the three-week long Carmel Performing Arts Festival will be ending with a bang after the last performance tomorrow night, but there are 14 events to attend before that happens. Get out the yellow highlighter, and read on — but first, a brief overview of some of last week's performances:

Audiences at the Forest Theatre's Indoor Stage were stunned by Raymond J. Barry's strong performance in "Back When, Back Then," a play disturbing in imagery not often presented on the Monterey Peninsula.

The Golden Bough Playhouse stage went through a number of set or backdrop changes last weekend to accommodate four distinct productions: The set for the Saturday matinee of The Western Stage's "The House on Mango Street," was constructed of colorful panels, while an elegantly simple backdrop framed the 7:30 evening musical production of "Verdi, the Man and His Music." Both productions were well-attended.

The backdrop changed once again for classical concert piano soloist Suzanne Macahilig who drew a strong audience at her Sunday afternoon performance, while the Ivanhoe Trio, a youth chamber music group featuring a 15-year-old cellist and a 12-year-old violinist, was well received by a small group of music lovers at its 5 p.m. pre-

Spooky doings in Monterey as 1,500 mystery fans and authors gather for Bouchercon '97 meet

PINE CONE STAFF REPORT

APPROPRIATELY AND just in time for Halloween, the four-day 28th world mystery convention known as Bouchercon '97 comes to Monterey Conference Center, 1 Portola Plaza, with more than 1,000 mystery fans, 500 writers, publicists, publishers and agents expected to be in attendance from Wednesday through Nov. 2.

The purpose of the international conclave is to make it possible for participants to listen to panel discussions by well-known writers on the art and substance of mystery writing and to mingle and socialize with other mystery fans from around the world. And to buy books.

Bouchercon was named in honor and memory of Anthony Boucher, who died in 1968 while a reviewer and critic of mystery fiction for The San Francisco Chronicle, Ellery Queen's Mystery Magazine and the Sunday New York Times Book Review. Boucher wrote several mysteries and a classic two-volume anthology of science fiction.

As well as Monterey Peninsula's acclaimed mystery writers, other nationally prominent authors who will be in attendance include Walter Mosley, Tony Hillerman, Donald Westlake, James Mall, Sara Paretsky, Elizabeth George and Aaron and Charlotte Elkins.

For more information on the conference, try this Internet web site:

IF MURPHY SEGALE had a job description, it would read, "Raccoon Alarmist," or perhaps — to be more nearly correct — "Alarm Alert Provider in the Event of Raccoon Invasion."

Joseph Campbell advocated following one's bliss if fulfillment is to be achieved in this lifetime. Murphy has taken those words to heart, and follows her bliss almost nightly as Carmel raccoons descend on the pond in Mom Laurie's side garden.

Murphy's bright bark, being worse than her bite, always, yes always, puts filchers to flight.

For doing her work so punctiliously, Murphy is rewarded with a run on Carmel Beach every morning where she swims a little, too. She has learned which habitués of the beach carry doggie treats, and greets each with an irresistibly beguiling smile and wag of her tail. Scotch Terriers, being thrifty, never buy their own biscuits if gratis goodies are available.

HALLOWEEN: Bake a pie and reminisce about 'Spook Dog'

AS HALLOWEEN approaches, I am reminded of those spooky ghost stories told late at night during childhood camping trips. While caramelized marshmallows and melting chocolate would fill the air with their sweet perfume, some older kid wove a tale of terror amongst an audience held captive by the campfire's warmth and the promise of a s'more. After a rousing conclusion, everyone would retreat hastily to nearby tents, but anticipation never diminished for the following night's creature feature.

The Bohemian Gourmet

By Jennifer Viegas

Local author Randall Reinstedt evokes similar pleasures in his series of books on actual ghost stories. "Ghost Notes: Haunted Happenings on California's Historic Monterey Peninsula," "Ghostly Tales and Mysterious Happenings of Old Monterey," "Incredible Ghosts of the Big Sur Coast" and other titles present fascinating accounts of ghost sightings, haunted houses and other unexplained phenomena in the area. Most of the stories were told first-hand to Reinstedt, who has been recognized for his work on this subject since 1970, when he wrote an article for a local magazine on the ghosts of old Monterey.

It is no wonder Reinstedt's books appeal to young and old alike. "I was born and raised here, but traveled the world as a tour conductor," explains the author. "That experience opened my eyes as to how exciting and romantic the Peninsula is.

"When I moved back to the area, I received my teaching credentials and taught fourth grade. History books at the time were fairly dry and did not really interest the kids. I wanted to get them excited about their own history. I thought about colorful stories from old times, about sea monsters, legendary ghosts and bandits, and used them to introduce certain lessons."

His students gained renewed interest in history, but after 15 years of teaching, Reinstedt now is known as an award-winning author of both adult and children's literature. On an interesting bohemian note, he also was a founding member of the Old Carmel Group, which later became the Carmel Heritage Society.

Carmel's own ghostly tales

Carmel itself lays claim to a wealth of ghostly tales. Stories of hauntings exist about the Flanders Mansion, Carmel Mission, The Old Carmel Bay Company on Ocean Avenue, certain houses on Carmel Point and Mission Ranch, where 19th century bandit Joaquin Murrieta is still said to roam. Also in the area, the Robert Louis Stevenson House supposedly has its Lady in Black, while the Hotel Del Monte, which is now the Naval Postgraduate school, is said to receive visits from a ghost called The Man in Gray.

'Spook Dog'

Reinstedt shared a story with me called "Spook Dog." In the late 1960s a Monterey policeman decided to quit the force to set up his own security protection agency. One of his agency's new beats was the San Carlos Cathedral, known as the Royal Presidio Chapel, in Monterey. On a rainy night, accompanied by his police-trained German Shepherd dog, the guard walked up a path leading to the old rectory building.

Suddenly his dog froze. Its tail flew between its legs and its fur bristled. Terrified, the dog tried to escape, but it was on a leash. The guard surveyed the area with his flashlight, but could not find anything suspicious. Puzzled, he summoned a priest at the rectory.

So many people had told the priest about unusual events at the old rectory that he decided to investigate matters with the guard. The two men flung open the old rectory door. As soon as the dog was coaxed to enter, it stood like a statue. They focused their lights on the dog, and it seemed to be fighting with an invisible force. Its paws were six inches off of the floor, but nothing could be observed underneath. The dog swatted and growled. Indentations were made on its neck, but no blood was drawn. Finally the struggle ended. The dog then raced up the stairs, as though it were chasing its attacker. Confused, it batted the air left and right with its paws until the ominous presence left.

"Spook Dog" was told to Reinstedt by the ex-policeman and the priest involved on separate occasions. Both stories were identical. Many, of course, will doubt the validity of such happenings, or will provide rational explanations for them. As Reinstedt says in this case, however, "If you cannot believe a priest and a policeman, then who can you trust?"

To help you get into the Halloween spirit, literally, Reinstedt will share other stories and historical lore during two lectures this month. The first, entitled "Ghosts and Mysteries of Monterey," will be presented at 2 p.m. Saturday in The Maritime Museum of Monterey. Children under 10 will not be admitted, but only because Reinstedt sentation following Macahilig.

Peter Davidson, movement artist with outstanding powers of concentration, brought applause at both his Devendorf Park and Carmel Ballet Academy Sunday performances of "Up in the Air" as he simultaneously recited poetry, juggled and moved in fluid and unique ways.

French music stylists, the Baguette Quartette, drew a large crowd at the Carmel Art Association gallery, and smaller but happy audiences at The Carmel Woman's Club with their 1920 to 1940s era Parisienne music. Accordionist Odile Lavault interacted playfully with the audience, a little in French, a little in English.

Yellow highlighter time:

The Lab Theater Company arrived in the village Monday to present three plays here tonight: An early evening performance of "Babylonian Tony" and "An Actor Prepares" — both by playwright Timothy Mason and directed by Ken Lowstetter — will be staged at 5 p.m. at the Golden Bough Playhouse, Monte Verde between Eighth and Ninth, in place of "Cannibals," which was previously scheduled.

Also by the Lab Theater Company at the same hour (5 p.m.), but at a different venue, "Rage of Chaos" by Jane Shephard — a one-man tour de force about a man marooned in a country b & b — will star Michael Warren Powell directed by Melanie Armer at the Indoor Forest Theatre, with a repeat performance tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock.

This evening at 6 at the Carmel Art Association, Dolores between Fifth and Sixth, there will be a free performance by vocalists Paul Grass and Company singing selections from show tunes to opera as the general public enjoys hors d'oeuvres and libations while listening in the gallery hung with the current art show.

At 7:30 tonight at the Sunset Theater, "Clara Schumann at the Piano," will be seen in its penultimate performance starring concert pianist/actor Beverly Serra-Brooks portraying the widow of German writer/composer Robert Schumann. Clara outlived her husband by 40 years and won acclaim as the romantic era's most celebrated performing artist. The final performance is tomorrow night at 7:30, after which the artist takes this show across the U.S. in a series of performances spanning many months.

Mary Anne Randl

"Bar Lies and Other Tales" — a theatrical cabaret about lessons and lives — can be seen at 7:30 tonight and 5 p.m. tomorrow at the Circle Theatre in the Golden Bough Playhouse, Monte Verde between Eighth and Ninth. Singer/actress Mary Anne Randl stars, directed by Peter Nyberg.

John Bilezikjian

The Thunderbird Bookstore Cafe in The Barnyard Shopping Village will be taken over by Middle Eastern music and food tonight at 7:30 as "Treasures of the Middle East" features John Bilezikjian on oud, Ishmael on Kanoun, Armando on Dumbek and dancers Una, Sausan, Luzza and Mee'sha, while diners enjoy a mezza combination plate of Middle Eastern specialities for $24 (a non-pass event).

Tomorrow at 2 and 7:30 p.m. in the Golden Bough Playhouse, Mary Lee Sunseri collaborates with friends in "Smile," a play about a writer, a painter, a dancer and a musician who combine their talents to make a little girl smile. John Rousseau is the writer/director.

Mary Lee Sunseri

CET/Staff players present Marcia Gambrell (Hovick) in "Voices from the Aegean Sea" tonight and tomorrow at 8 o'clock at the Indoor Forest Theatre. Gambrell will transport audiences to ancient Thebes, the Hesperides and to Circe's island via her original script and solo performance.

Saturday Breakfast Club

Enjoy muffins and coffee while listening to a play reading about a young slave, a man obsessed with her and her determination to be free, at 9:30 a.m. tomorrow at The General Store/Forge in the Forest restaurant; then help yourself to an elaborate breakfast buffet — all for $14. "To Take Arms," by Susan Flakes will be read by local actors and TV performers Iona Morris, Hattie Winston and Sanaa Lathan directed by Andra Weddington.

Early arrival is advised, as seating is limited. Please note this final play reading is on Saturday, not Sunday as has been the case the last two weekends.

The Carmel High School Jazz Band will give a free show tomorrow at 1 p.m. at The Crossroads Shopping Center.

"Perfecting Quality in the Dynamics of Drama in Painting and Theater Production," a three-hour workshop by visionary painter Elizabeth Palmer (a member of Theta Alpha Phi national honorary society of the theater with a master's degree of fine arts in theater from Yale's department of drama) will be held from 2 to 5 p.m. tomorrow at Sunset Center, Room 3, San Carlos between Eighth and Ninth. Cost is $35 at the door and $25 for students and festival artists.

Mara Freeman will tell mythic tales from Scotland and Ireland to zither music in a visually compelling manner, while Gerry Smida will sing and play Celtic harp, Irish flutes, pipes and 12-string guitar and keyboard at 5 p.m. tomorrow at Scout House, corner of Mission and Eighth in their final festival performance.

Gerry Smida

Smida will appear at two free noon performances today and tomorrow. Today's show is at The Barnyard Shopping Village and tomorrow's is at Carmel Plaza, Ocean Avenue at Junipero.

The Jazz Store will present John "Buddy" Conner and Trio — featuring Spencer Allen, described as mellow and melodic — tomorrow evening at 7:30, The Crossroads Shopping Center next to Radio Station KRML, a non-pass event.

Buy a pass, go to party

The festival's producing artistic director, Robin McKee, says it is still possible to purchase a five-show pass for $40, which will entitle the pass holder to mingle with festival performers at a special closing night party tomorrow night after the last performances — around 9:15 — at Bradley Jones Restaurant and Tavern, 3690 The Barnyard. Hors d'oeuvres will be served at the cash bar.

For information, call 644-8383.

Jazz giant sings here Saturday

POWERFUL JAZZ singer John "Buddy" Conner, performing this Saturday at the Jazz Store in Carmel with pianist Spencer Allen, is a Berkeley, native with deep roots in gospel and blues. His performance with John Handy at this year's Seaside Jazz and Art show revealed a mature jazz and blues singer who delivers the goods with great emotion. Early stints during the '60s in San Francisco with musicians John Turk, Jules Broussard and Bishop Norman Williams started him on his way. In the '70s he toured and recorded with Doug and Jean Carne and during the '80s he received his first big break, a gig as featured vocalist for the Earl "Fatha" Hines Orchestra. After Hines' death in 1983, Connor hit the festival circuit with his own band making a stop at the Monterey Jazz Festival along the way.

Big Rain

Today Connor keeps busy recording and performing with such luminaries as tenor saxophonists Wilton Felder and Pharoah Sanders, and alto saxophonist John Handy. Says longtime Connor friend and fellow musician Handy, "Buddy is an extraordinary talent, an intelligent and sensitive singer who can croon, scream, scat, moan, beg. You name it, Buddy can do it!" Show begins at 7:30 p.m. Two sets. $20 per person. Call 624-6432 for reservations.

Also, future shows at the Jazz Store to keep in mind: pianist/vocalist Mose Allison with Michael Martin on Nov. 10 and 11; The Babatunde Quartet on Dec. 13; vocalist Jessica Williams on Dec. 20; pianist Denny Zietlin with bassist David Friesen on Feb. 21.

soft rock 'n' roll that incorporates elements of jazz and "tropical funk." Their debut CD, Sound of Freedom, was released earlier this year on their own label Umbrella Records. Acoustic rock group Meanwhile opens the show at 7:30 p.m. Admission is $5 for students or $8 for the general public; advance tickets can be purchased at Do Re Mi Records for $4.

The Black Box Cabaret, located on Fourth Avenue (take your first left at Light Fighter Drive), was originally the brainchild and creation of Christopher Morgan (owner/proprietor of Morgan's Coffee and Tea in Monterey) but is now operated by students and teachers at the University. Despite an impressive start by Christopher (a series of concerts that had me thinking that this was to become a great venue where students and locals would mix), not much has happened at the Black Box Cabaret since. Hopefully tonight's concert gets the CSUMB venue back on the right track.

Halloween Musical Offerings

Halloween falls on a Friday this year, good news for local nightclubs. Doc's Nightclub on Cannery Row will celebrate the Feast of All Saints with its Second Annual Exotic Erotic Halloween Bash featuring two local rock 'n' roll bands, Gel and Lovers & Strangers; Whitey's Place in Pacific Grove will chase the ghouls away with a Tribute to Prince featuring Sir Jac ($5 cover); and Monterey Billiards hosts a costume extravaganza with house favorites Torch 'n' the Bones. Torch, of course, is none other than former Medfly Carl Christ singing vamped up versions of Sinatra and Dean Martin. Also on tap at Monterey Billiards tonight is Rumors, a Sacramento-based tribute band to Fleetwood Mac. I cannot attest to the group's sound but they certainly do have the look down and I am told that they play all of the group's greatest hits. Cover is $5. Music starts at 9.

MaryLee & Nancy

New recordings are now available by local award-winning children's artists MaryLee Sunseri and Nancy Stewart. Sunseri and Stewart, who perform both as solo acts and together, put together a show entitled Singin' Sidesaddle for the Summer Reading Program in King County Libraries in Washington State and "because it was such a hit decided to make it a recording." MaryLee, a Pacific Grove resident, recently released her fifth recording, Smile, five original songs plus seven pop standards performed in a jazzy upbeat style by Sunseri, Ali Ryerson on flute and Bob Phillips on piano. Both recordings are available at BookWorks in Pacific Grove, Thunderbird Bookstore and Do Re Mi Music in Carmel.

MOVIES

The Edge: Lee Tamahori's drama, from a screenplay David Mamet, pits the Alaskan wilderness against billionaire (Anthony Hopkins) and a treacherous fashon photographer (Alec Baldwin) who may be involved withithe wealthy man's wife (Elle Macpherson). (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

Fairy Tale — A True Story: In 1917, two young girls (Elizabeth Earl and Florence Hoath) claim to have seen — and photographed — fairies in their English backyard, and are able to persuade luminaries of the time like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle (Peter O'Toole) and Harry Houdini (Harvey Keitel) to believe in their claims. Charles Sturridge directed. (PG) Lighthouse Cinemas

The Full Monty: After Chippendales–style male dancers perform at their pub's ladies night, six unemployed steelworkers in Sheffield, England, are inspired to put together their own strip act. Directed by Peter Cattaneo. (R) Crossroads Cinemas

The Game: Michael Douglas stars in David Fincher's thriller as a businessman whose life spins out of control after his brother (Sean Penn) gives him a birthday gift — a game that escalates into a life–or–death contest. (R) Crossroads Cinemas

I Know What You Did Last Summer: Jim Gillespie's drama, based on a novel by Lois Duncan, stars Johnny Galecki as a murder witness who years later is still receiving anonymous notes and calls from the killer; it also features Claire Danes, Jennifer Love Hewitt and Freddie Prinze Jr. (R) Lighthouse Cinemas

In and Out: A high school teacher, about to me married, is "outed" by an ex–student who has become a movie star. Frank Oz directed the comedy, with Kevin Kline as the teacher, Joan Cusack as the fiancee, Matt Dillon as the star, and Tom Selleck as the gay tabloid reporter. (PG-13) Lighthouse Cinemas & Galaxy 6 Cineams

Kiss the Girls: Morgan Freeman and Ashley Judd star as a widowed detective and a doctor who search the underworld for the detective's apparently kidnapped niece. With Cary Elwes, Tony Goldwyn and Bill Nunn. (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

L.A. Confidential: Curtis Hanson's crime thriller, based on the novel by James Ellroy, stars Kevin Spacey, James Cromwell, Russell Crowe and Guy Pearce as detectives in Los Angeles, circa 1950, who realize that a mysterious woman (Kim Basinger) is involved in two of their investigations. (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

A Life Less Ordinary: Danny Boyle's romantic black comedy stars Ewan McGregor as a janitor who is so upset after he is dismissed from his job that he kidnaps the boss's daughter (Cameron Diaz), who then conspires with him to extort her dad (Ian Holm, as two angels (Holly Hunter and Delroy Lindo) orchestrate a romance. (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

The Peacemaker: Mimi Leder's thriller stars George Clooney and Nicole Kidman as American intelligence operatives who are assigned to track down hijacked nuclear weapons. (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

Playing God: A famous doctor (David Duchovny) is dismissed for using drugs while in surgery, then is drawn into the underworld when he is employed as the personal doctor of a gangster (Timothy Hutton). Andy Wilson directed the drama, which also stars Angelina Jolie as the gangster's girlfriend. (R) Galaxy 6 Cinemas

Rocket Man: In Stuart Gillard's family comedy, a bumbling NASA rocket scientist (Harland Williams) is sent to the Mars space station. With Jessica Lundy, William Sadler, Jeffrey DeMunn, Shelly Duvall and Beau Bridges. (PG) Lighthouse Cinemas

AND, PLEASE, HAVE YOUR PETS SPAYED OR NEUTERED

INCLUDE YOUR PETS IN PLANS FOR "EL NINO"

There has been a lot of talk about the effects of El Nino in our area this winter. If you remember the recent floods of '95, you know how devastating they can be. During those floods, The SPCA rescued many animals, so we urge you to make sure your pets are included in your emergency plans. The SPCA suggests pet owners should have a people and a pet emergency kit and plan.

What should you put in your pet's emergency kit? Pet food, bowls, a can opener, a copy of his/her health record that shows important vaccinations or special medical needs, extra collars/leashes, even a picture of your pet to post if you are separated. You might also consider having a pet first aid kit on hand, since human and pet medical needs can be quite different.

Also, please remember, if you are evacuated this winter, please do not leave your pet behind! The SPCA works with the Red Cross to accepts pets from evacuees!

We make a donation to The SPCA the first time you use our service.

Pezzini Farms

In 50 years of farming the Central Coast, the Pezzini family has learned a thing or two about what makes the finest produce this side of the Santa Lucia Mountains.

Their store, Pezzini Farms, located at the entrance to the Crossroads opposite the Rio Grill, is the resource for top-drawer fruits and vegetables, ready-made entrees and a wide range of gift packages that sing the praises of local agriculture.

Stop by any day and see what's on the menu at the Artichoke Café. Succulent artichokes will be pulled from the steamer and served with an exquisite dipping sauce. You'll often find fresh salads and fruit plates, artichoke soup, stuffed artichokes or other vegetables that are steamed to perfection.

The shop is stocked with succulent salsas, pasta sauces and specialty food items from many sources. It's also the source for the Pezzini Farms' line of dipping and pasta sauces, artichoke pesto and artichoke spread.

Treat yourself or the cooks on your gift list with a beautifully presented herb spray, garlic braid or chili string. Pezzini Farms also mail orders the world's finest artichokes to the lucky people on your gift list.

Pezzini Farms is well worth investigating. And it's open every day. Call 626-2734.

PEZZINI FARMS

Caffé del Mare

Scott Trambley, a graduate of the Culinary Institute of America, and his Italian-born wife, Clelia, together have 20 years' experience in the hospitality industry. Last month, they opened their first restaurant, Caffé del Mare (Café by the Sea), which is located in the patio on Mission between Ocean and Seventh, directly across from Carmel Plaza.

A glimpse of the menu proves this is no ordinary café. Open for breakfast and lunch, it features ambrosial treats at very reasonable prices. For example, Scott has devised an oven-baked French toast that incorporates brioche and bananas ($ 5.50). A joy! Crêpes come with an apricot glaze, creme fraiche, and are dusted with powdered sugar ($2.25). The breakfast menu also features egg dishes cooked to order, freshly squeezed juices and much more. One taste and you'll be a believer.

Lunch is, again, thoughtful, delicious, and affordably priced. Dine outdoors on the patio or in the cozy dining room. The luncheon menu includes rotisserie chicken with fries and salad ($5.75), caramelized onion tart with goat cheese and local greens ($4.25), steamed vegetables with brown rice in a sesame or peanut glaze ($4.25), and delightful salads.

Beers, wines, and specialty coffees accompany meals, as well as smoothies and milk shakes. The dessert list runs wild: (think créme brulee, fruit tart and three-scoop ice cream sundaes.)

Getting hungry? Caffé del Mare is open 8:30 to 3:30 daily except Tuesday. Call 625-4043.

Ann Monda

In the words of Ann Monda, M.A., D.T.R., D.C., it is her goal "to provide state-of-the-art chiropractic care and treat patients as if they were family."

At Dr. Monda's office in Carmel-by-the-Sea, she welcomes questions and is happy to provide consultations and spinal exams at no charge. She may be reached by calling 625-5003.

Because of her extensive training in kinesiology (the study of the movement of the body) and her professional dance training, she treats a variety of athletic and sports injuries.

Dr. Monda has completed advanced studies in gentle force chiropractic techniques. She introduces a full body adjustment technique which does not require twisting and torquing of the spine, and is designed to restore spinal alignment and proper nerve function.

Through gentle adjustments of the entire body, the muscles and nervous system become more balanced and operate at optimum capacity, she explains.

"Individuals who have never tried chiropractic are especially surprised that this non-traumatic, painless technique can often make them feel much better on the first visit," says Dr. Monda.

ScotterWear

What small mammal is most closely associated with the Monterey Peninsula? That abalone-seeking resident of Monterey Bay, the California sea otter! Newly opened in Carmel Plaza is ScotterWear, a shop that celebrates this fun-loving furball.

Scotter Wear, located on the fountain level of the plaza, is home to a full collection of casual fashions for men, women and children. All feature the California sea otter as depicted by local artist Scott Parejo.

The shop gathers cotton separates (woolens will arrive as the weather cools) as well as accessories. All are made in the U.S.A. and feature the otter motif either in embroidered or screen-printed form.

The accessories side of the collection is highly gift-worthy and includes golf bags and golf balls, hats, socks and even bibs for babies. The entire collection is surprisingly affordable and downright fun.

Scotter Wear is open daily. Simply call 626-4051.

LOCKWOOD VINEYARDS NEW LABEL SHALE RIDGE

Lockwood Vineyards anounces the birth of a sister label, SHALE RIDGE, a new estate winery producing Chardonnay and Merlot. The unique combination of rocky soil and maritime weather patterns in Southern Monterey County produces grapes of full ripeness and extraordinary flavors.

Exotics are the rage — Foreign fruits get naturalized

THERE USED to be a time when Chiquita Banana was considered exotic, but would that lady have competition today!

Central America was the export base from which most tropical fruits were shipped, but today Latin America, most prominently Chile and Mexico, and distant ports in Australia, New Zealand and the rest of Asia are the source for satisfying our more sophisticated palates.

Americans have become world travelers in the past 20 years, and their demand for more unusual flavors has increased. Another stimulus for broadening our familiarity with a wider spectrum of fruits is the new nutrition pyramid fruit not only tastes good, it's good for us.

Traveling Gourmet

By Lotte Mendelsohn

Responding to this demand, the warmer climes in our own California and in Florida, Texas and Hawaii have provided us with new crops of fruits like papaya, cherimoya, feijoa, succulent Asian pears and the odd-looking kiwano.

If you'd like to make friends with some of these attractive and delicious strangers, I'll be delighted to play produce marriage-broker.

Asian Pears: Originally grown in China, these could be called the Kings of Crunch. Their grainy skins conceal a burst of delicious flavor, and they hold their shape for salads and fruit arrangements. They often wear a white lattice coat which protects them on their long journey from the Orient.

Carambolas, Star Fruit: The darlings of the caterers due to their bright color and decorative shape when sliced crosswise, are tricky to select because their exterior says nothing about whether they will be sweet or puckery when cut. Choose truly golden ones without bruises.

Cherimoya, Custard apple: Looking like a cross between a green pineapple without the leafy topknot or a huge artichoke, the cherimoya has long been a South American staple. Filled with fat, shiny black seeds, the flesh has a pleasantly musky flavor and a custardy consistency which lends itself to purées for sherbets or mousses. Always serve chilled.

Feijoa, Pineapple guava: Khaki-colored and shaped like a jumbo egg, when ripe the fruit has a pungent perfume and a tart/sweet flavor. The pulp lends itself to jellies, chutneys etc. as well as a place on a party fruit display.

Kiwano, Horned melon: If there's such a thing as a science-fiction fruit, this is it! An orange, six-inch oval protected by sharp spikes, the fruit has little going for it other than its value as a conversation piece. The flesh is stringy and all but tasteless. It's also expensive.

Lychees: Dried, these delicious fruits are called "nuts". Choose rosy not brown skins and keep them in the refrigerator. Eat the interior pale pulp plain or mix with other fruits in a medley.

Mango: Not as unfamiliar to us as other jewels of the tropics, they still present a challenge as to how to eat them. Spear the stem end with a fork right into the pit; coming from the pointed end, score the skin in quarters and peel away. Now slice the flesh from the large pit and enjoy their perfumed sweetness.

Papaya, Pawpaw: Less foreign to American consumers since the Hawaiian genus has been popularized, papayas both golden and rosy are a delicious staple on Latin American tables. Peeled, sliced and simply sprinkled with lime juice, they are a refreshing addition to our tropical fruit inventory. They also contain a digestive enzyme which is used to tenderize meats. I used to toss a slice onto my beef stew.

Passion Fruit: The "passion" refers to the biblical sense, not the sensual meaning, although the perfume of its juice might put you in the mood for dalliance. Select the heaviest of the crop, those that have begun to wrinkle. Give a little shake, they should sound squishy. When they are ripe you can freeze the whole fruit in a plastic bag for later use of the juice and pulp as a topping for desserts, or an ingredient in fruit punches.

Prickly pear, Cactus pear: Spiny and ranging in color from a light green to a deep maroon, the "tuna" as it is called in Mexico, is enjoying a new popularity in the States. Choose unblemished, rosy ones, handling them carefully even though most are mechanically deprickled. Peel, quick process or mash and then strain away the seeds. The pulp can be blended with lemon juice and sugar and then mounded in parfait glass. The fruit is also eaten sliced doing with the seeds whatever you do with watermelon seeds. Always serve chilled.

There are more members of this culinary community and I suggest you take a few home and experiment with them in your own kitchen. Remember a friend is an unknown other member of the human race 'til you shake hands!

Indonesian Fruit Salad

Dorrit Senior, one of the authors of "Cooking with Fruit," was born in South Africa, but has spent a good deal of time in Micronesia. She suggests that this recipe may be served with skewers as an appetizer or as an accompaniment to a main course. Note the use of partially ripe fruits to accentuate the sweet tart flavors of the salad.

Serves 6

3 Tbsp. tamarind paste (found in Asian markets)
1/2 cup water
1/2 cup dark brown sugar
1/2 tsp. salt
1/4 tsp. red pepper flakes, or to taste
1 cup chopped partly ripe mango, in 1 inch cubes
1 cup chopped partly ripe papaya, in 1 inch cubes

Notes from the '97 crush

1997 HARVEST

OUR HANDS are deep purple now. We've just finished pressing the 1997 Cabernet Sauvignon off the skins, and we are ready to declare another harvest completed. It was a prolific year, as far as grape production is concerned, with plenty of grapes to spare. But, you ask, "How was the quality?" I must say, that in July-August, when the growers indicated how much crop was on the vines, I had my doubts. I thought, "With all those berries on the vines, there's no way they can reach proper maturity and ripeness."

Bill Anderson, Wine Maker, Chateau Julien Wine Estates

Not only did we receive grapes with ample sugar levels at 23 and 24 percent, we saw fruit with plenty of acid content to balance out those high sugar levels. The result is sure to please the quality minded wine consumer, with luscious flavors and plenty of mouth filling texture.

Getting back to our purple hands. Each year seems to have several characteristics that define the harvest. Besides the yield, 1997 could probably be called "The year of the small berry". Certainly that was the case with the Cabernet Sauvignon and the Merlot. When we first saw the grapes upon arrival at the winery, we couldn't help but notice how small they were in comparison to years past. We immediately began thinking "intensity". Sure enough, once the must (juice and skins) was pumped into the tanks after crushing and destemming, the juice picked up as much color in one day as it normally takes in five days of skin contact. In addition, instead of a ten day fermentation, we had a twenty one day fermentation. The resulting wine is without a doubt, the richest, deepest shade of purple we have ever seen. Everything that comes in contact with it seems to be permanently stained. Thus, the purple hands. (Someone asked me if this was our purple badge of courage.)

There are a couple of other things worth noting. Remember that week of October 1 3th when temperatures reached into the 90's? While it might have been uncomfortable for us fogophiles, it was perfect for our fermenting red wines. One of the components of a great red wine is a hot fermentation. When the ambient temperatures in Carmel Valley reached 90 to 99 degrees, our Cabernet Sauvignon cap temperatures were approaching 85 to 90 degrees. While it's a little nerve racking, we were able to walk that fine temperature line between intense, flavor enhancing warmth and yeast damaging heat. We don't always get to walk that line, but 1997 was definitely an exhilarating journey on the edge of winemaking. When we finished the trek, we knew we had a very special set of red wines, full of aroma and flavor intensity, rivaling any in the world.

Breathtaking, and well worth the effort. Get ready for something exciting!

tailors other presentations just for kids. The second lecture begins at 7 p.m. Thursday in California's First Theater in Monterey. It is sponsored by the Monterey State Historic Park Association.

Blood and Swash Punch

"The Ghost and Mrs. Muir," my favorite movie about a haunted house, was partially filmed on the Monterey Peninsula. I named this Halloween beverage, perfect for warming up tired trick or treaters, after the ghost sea captain's own ripping yarn.

3-1/2 cups cranberry juice
3 cups apple cider
1 orange, spiked with 12 cloves
12 whole allspice
cinnamon sticks for garnish

Place juice, cider, orange and allspice in a non-reactive saucepan over moderately high heat. Bring to a boil, cover, reduce heat to low and simmer for 10 minutes.

Strain mixture. Ladle into mugs or heat-resistant punch glasses. Garnish each serving with a cinnamon stick. Yields about six cups.

Ghostwriter's Impossible Pumpkin Pie

No one is quite sure who invented the following recipe, which was distributed by General Mills years ago, so I have added the word "ghostwriter" to its title. The pie, though delicious and an absolute cinch to prepare, is itself a bit spooky. It has no traditional crust, but bakes and serves like any other pumpkin pie.

3/4 cup sugar
1/2 cup Bisquick baking mix
2 Tbsp. margarine or butter, softened
1 12-oz. can evaporated milk
2 eggs
1 16-ounce can pumpkin
2 1/2 tsp. pumpkin pie spice
2 tsp. vanilla extract

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Butter a 10-inch pie pan.

Beat all ingredients in a mixing bowl until smooth. Pour batter in pan. Leave half-inch or so of space in pan at the top to allow for rising. Bake for about 50 minutes, or until pie is firm and a toothpick inserted in the center comes out clean. Yields one pie.

TRAVELING GOURMET...

1 cup chopped seeded cucumber, in 1 inch pieces
2 oranges, peeled, pith removed, sections cut into three pieces

1. Dissolve the tamarind paste in the water and strain, then mix the liquid with brown sugar, salt and red pepper in a serving bowl.
2. Blanch the mango and papaya in boiling water for one minute; drain well.
3. Stir the papaya, mango, cucumber and orange pieces into the sauce and coat well. May be chilled or served at room temperature.

Answers to this week's puzzle page 5B

JOE FITZPATRICK

arriving at 4:09 p.m. to prepare for his tragic flight that began a little more than an hour later.

The magazine stated that Federal Aviation Administration regulations forbid a pilot to fly a plane within eight hours after consuming any alcoholic beverage.

(HOWEVER, Monterey County chief deputy coroner Joe Grebmeier told The Pine Cone early this week that, "we have found no indication that he (Denver) was consuming alcohol before he got into that plane.

("Not only did we NOT find evidence of him drinking, but we found evidence to the contrary.")

THE ENQUIRER quoted "insiders" as saying Denver has been depressed the last few years over his 1993 divorce from his second wife, "and was upset that radio stations had stopped playing his songs."

The quotation of the "insider" continued, "He drowned his sorrows with booze, but that only made them worse."

THE "constant risks" he took, the Enquirer quoted a psychiatrist, "were designed to blot out the painful feelings."

The Globe said that immediately after taking off in the plane he had gotten only the day before, Denver headed for Spyglass where he swooped down "very low and fast" to buzz his golfing buddies at the clubhouse.

FURTHER, the Globe claimed that the night before (Saturday), the singer had been "drinking with pals, including Clint Eastwood," at the bar in Mission Ranch (which Eastwood owns).

(Eastwood's wife, Dina Ruiz, however, said that she and Clint were not even in town that evening.)

AFTER the evening of alleged tippling, the Globe account said, Denver teed off the next morning at Spyglass at 8 a.m. with his golfing partners.

That's considerably more about Denver's alleged activities leading up to the accident than the local media revealed, but is any of it true?

CAN the accuracy of the Globe and the Enquirer be trusted at all?

More light may be shed when the results of toxicology tests on Denver's body — including blood alcohol level, if any — are made public in four to six weeks.

NONE of this, of course, will bring back the likable, megatalented John Denver, but it would help with closure to know EXACTLY what happened, the tabloids notwithstanding.

TODAY'S QUOTE . . . Mark Twain, explaining the meaning of "average:"

"If a man has one foot in a bucket of boiling water and the other foot in a bucket of ice water, on average he's comfortable."

HIGH TIME . . . Harold Martin of Monterey attended a business convention last month in Philadelphia where one of the speakers, an insurance executive from Boston, droned on for over two hours.

"Some of us were yawning," Martin said. "Others were dolefully shaking their heads from side to side, and a few kept raising one arm in the air in attempts to be very conspicuous about checking their wrist-watches."

NOTHING, however, seemed to faze the speaker. But when he finally ended his lengthy discourse he told the assemblage he was sorry if he had talked too long but that he wasn't able to keep track of time because he had forgotten his watch.

A voice from near the back of the room called out, "There's a calendar on the wall behind you!"

Laughter.

IN MORSEL COMBAT . . . Finding buyers for restaurants is a specialty of Carmel Realtor Demon Don Bowen, and The Demon has been on a fast pace lately, as the following sales will attest:

• Monterey Joe's, the San Francisco-style Italian bistro on North Fremont in Monterey, has been purchased by Chris and Sabu Shake Jr. (better known as "JR"), who also own the Fish Hopper restaurant on Cannery Row.

The handsome Monterey Joe's establishment, formerly owned by Syl Enea, will continue to serve dinner seven days a week and lunch on weekdays, and the Shakes will add California cuisine to the Italian-American fare.

• Creme Carmel on San Carlos near 7th has been bought by Albert Steel and Kathryn Bryant, both of Las Vegas where they were proprietors of "The Aristocrat" restaurant.

They are considering changing the name of Creme Carmel (but have not decided on a new one), and will continue to operate it as a dinner house — hopefully opening about Dec. 1.

• Monarch Cafe, a popular breakfast and lunch spot on Fountain Avenue in Pacific Grove, has been acquired by Art and Dianne Russell. It will be open Mondays through Saturdays.

The sellers here were Donald and Susan Gonzalez.

THESE FOOLISH THINGS . . . Steve Gann was a respected Herald photographer for 10 years before he was knocked off the work schedule for reasons unclear by a Scripps Howard-imported supervisor during the last 16 months of that chain's reign.

Last week, Gann got retribution.

THE NEWSPAPER Guild had a filed a grievance against S-H, and last week an arbitrator fully vindicated Gann and ordered the chain to pay him for the entire 16 months and to substantially increase the severance payment he received when the paper was taken over by Knight-Ridder!

Sometimes there IS justice for the little guy.

OOPS! . . . Was that a gaffe by the Knight-Ridder daily the other day when it ran a picture of one of the veteran Herald employees it had dumped when it took over the paper?

The story described how the Employment Development Department helps displaced professional people with their job searches.

A PHOTO with the story showed three women being helped with their resumes at the EDD. The one in the middle was Mariann Klinger, a veteran copy desk stalwart at the Herald before Knight-Ridder dispatched her (along with 24 others) on Guillotine Sunday a few weeks ago!

POSTSCRIPT — Did Knight-Ridder blunder in axing Klinger, as it seemed to do with so many others?

Well, Mariann is now a valued member of the Santa Cruz Sentinel staff, while K-R is still running a turnstile operation in trying to find anything CLOSE to a qualified successor to her on their own copy desk!

Sometimes there IS justice for . . . oh never mind.

PAT DuVAL, the Monterey County singing sheriff, is still on schedule to take over the restaurant service at Los Laureles Lodge, beginning in the middle of next month after he retires from the sheriff's department, he reports.

He'll have the noted "Smokin' Jim" operating a barbecue pit, plus a number of other innovations when he finally takes over, he promises!

LASTLY . . . Don't wait until the last minute. Only 68 short days until Christmas! Get hot!

WHAT'S NEW with Meg

Pumpkin cookies...costume contest...granny gowns...dressed up quails... and much much more.

In the mood for a spicy sesame noodle salad? Roasted eggplant and pine nuts? What about Basquaise meatballs, or Japanese beef stew for dinner tonight? And quarts of pumpkin soup? All this and a great deal more at LA GOURMANDISE at the Crossroads. Fran and Thierry (he's the chef) came to Carmel from Provence a couple of years ago and have since solved many a question of what to do about lunch, dinner, whereto eat it (there, at a table in the sun or at home). Their soups, salads and sandwiches are gourmet-delicious; you see, Thierry has a magic touch! La Gourmandise, a great little habit! 145 The Crossroads Blvd., Carmel. 626-6993

LOES HINSE

The latest from LOES HINSE (pronounced Luce Hinsa) is always a surprise; no telling what her next designs might be! She's done a scarf now...a long and skinny scarf in solids or tweeds, partially made of vintage kimono silk and very workable and useable! A one-of-a-kind scarf for a perfect gift. And then she has a "faux fur" short jacket in burgundy - very warm, comfortable, feels like a sweater, goes with jeans or dress. Have her show you her new long tops over short skirts, right now in plum only, and the 2-piece crushed velvet long top & pants. Clothes beyond compare. 542 Lighthouse, Monterey. Closed Monday.

With the holidays around the corner let me remind you that this is a good time to have your carpets and upholstery cleaned by Charles Belmont. The BELMONT METHOD is unique in that it doesn't use steam or soap, foam or powders; it doesn't take long to dry; and it's a method that lasts far longer than regular cleaning jobs. Remember, this is the company that says there will be no charge unless you like what you see! Call today for a free estimate to have those carpets and upholstery cozily-clean for the winter days to come. Call 625-3242.

Jan and Richard Mumford, owners of the well-known Country Store in Pacific Grove, have expanded into the Barnyard! Yes, their second COUNTRY STORE is also filled with traditional furniture and accessories of quality, the kind you don't find elsewhere! Come see the solid wood pine and cherry furniture - cabinets, cupboards, including beautiful hand-painted cupboards with a French country look, English pine hutches, dining tables, great looking beds and more. Also, slip-covered sofas (comfortably chic!), dramatic pillows, gourmet wine racks, Hadley pottery, fabric sculptured dolls (animals all dressed up!) and so much more! Next to Carmel Coffee Roasting Co. - The Barnyard, 642-6890.

Knowing how much you love "Lanz of Salzburg", and assuming you've been looking for it since the retail shops have closed, the UNDERWORLD is happy to say you'll find this popular sleepwear, "Lanz of Salzburg by Eileen West" right there! Choose from a selection of granny gowns, sleep shirts, pajamas and robes. In several patterns - "Dancing with Roses", "Sleeping Bear" and a rich dark red and green plaid, it's that same wonderful 100% cotton flannel you love to curl up in. Sweet dreams! At the UNDERWORLD, San Carlos and 7th, Carmel. 624-1400.

Starting today, TOWN OR TRAVEL is having a 30% off sale on wool pants and skirts in popular fall colors of brown, oatmeal and camel. Included will be checkered pants in tan and brown tones. All are sizes 6 to 16, in both Missy and Petite. Marge is also putting discontinued patterns of her poly-print Schrader dresses on sale. These are petites sizes 4-14, missy 8-18. For the best selection, I strongly suggest you get to this shop as soon as possible. On Mission betw. 5th and 6th, on walkway to San Carlos, Carmel. 626-0276. (You'll be glad you read this column!)

Make DEL MONTE PASTRY SHOP a family habit this fall. Start with orange frosted pumpkin - faced cookies for your children's lunch bags. Then try all the other favorites - individual pumpkin tarts and pies (pecan & mincemeat coming soon!), decorated Halloween cakes, autumn leaf cookies (so real looking!), old-fashioned apple pie, assorted scones, pumpkin bread, and of course, if someone's particularly devilish at your table, bring on the Zuger cherry brandy cake! You'll find all your old favorites, plus an extended pastry line from owners Laura and George. Del Monte Shopping Center, next to Lucky's. 375-4222.

As you know, PARSLEY SAGE & THYME has everything for the kitchen including clothing for the chef! As part of the Guy Buffet line (he's a delightful French artist specializing in zealous and stone-faced chefs), you now can have whimsical pants for the chef aprons, T-shirts, even a baseball cap with the logo. The line includes plates, mugs, paper plates, napkins, so if you haven't yet been introduced to the Guy Buffet chefs, drop by! Also see the beautiful martini, champagne and wine glasses, as well as fabric napkins - just what your well-dressed bar must have for the upcoming holidays. The Crossroads, across from Caffé & Co. 620-0515.

Arlee M is Back! Yes, she's back so mark your calendar right now for either Friday, Nov. 7 or Saturday, Nov. 8! ARLEE M's famous trunk shows, delighting peninsulans for many years, will be center stage each of the two days at either 10am or 2pm. New and exciting fabrics and fashions to flatter your figure and make life easier. Among many highlights, Sioux jackets in facile in new colors - violene, bottle green and the hot fashion color Java brown; Micro-fiber stretch suede pants, jackets and 5-gore skirt - comfortable and washable in navy, Java brown, redwood and black. Call Judy or Barbara 624-6484 for reservations & directions, and tell your friends!

Halloween Costume Contest at CARMEL NEEDLE ARTS! Next Friday drop by Carmel Needle Arts in costume (you don't have to be a "stitcher") anytime you wish, help yourself to "spooky" refreshments and hope to win one of three prizes! 1st prize - $100 gift certificate for the shop; 2nd prize-any Amanda Lawford canvas in stock valued at $75 or less; 3rd prize-Goodie Bag valued at $50. Judging will be at 4:30. You don't have to be present to win, but it might be more fun to pick up your prize immediately! A wonderful schedule of winter workshops starting Nov. 7 is available. CallAmanda, 626-1545 for information. Mission Patio Shops betw. 5th & 6th, Carmel.

Don't forget the ALEXANDER STRING QUARTET, Thursday, Nov. 6 at Sunset Center. A memorable concert featuring the works of Mozart, Walton and Beethoven, sponsored by the CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY OF THE MONTEREY PENINSULA. For tickets and information, call 625-2212.

Sea Scribes calligraphy exhibit at the Thunderbird!

Mystery No. 1: Can you guess who these people are? These are some of the festive masks worn to "An Evening in Venice," the American Cancer Society Gala presented Saturday at the Grand Ballroom of the Inn at Spanish Bay. Answers on page 10B.

Co-Chairs Grace Ashby, President Linda Balesteri and volunteer Lee Martin greet guests at the American Cancer Society's Gala Saturday. Balesteri painted her mask on her face.

'An Evening in Venice' benefit proves enchanting

OH, MY dears, you should have been at the American Cancer Society's Second Annual Gala Saturday if only to see the magnificent decorations. Entitled "An Evening in Venice," the gala, held in the grand ballroom at Spanish Bay, presented patrons an entire wall covered with a huge painting of a Venetian bridge over a canal. In front of the stage was a life-size replica of a gondola. Guests were oohing and aahing as they entered the room.

Social Spotlight

By Dodie Barkley

The tables dazzled, with wine-colored tablecloths and midnight black napkins. At each plate rested a lovely golden mask. The lighting was enchantingly dim, just as I remember seeing in many Renaissance villas in Venice. It truly resembled an evening in that romantic city. The four talented co-chairs, President Linda Balesteri, Grace Ashby, Michelle Pheasant and Phyllis Decker, should receive a special award for their creative efforts.

A champagne reception was followed by a delicious dinner, marvelous entertainment by Frank Quilantang and the DiFranco Dancers, an art auction and several operatic arias given by Arthur Reedie and Mary Margaret Graham.

A drawing was held for a gorgeous Louis Vuitton duffel traveling bag, and a prize given for the best costume, followed by dancing with music by the Mike Marotta Band

Versatile Hunter Finnell, sports director at KION-TV 46, was the art auctioneer. Finnell could sell the Brooklyn Bridge if he had a mind to.

Using his special brand of humor, he led buyers quickly through all the works of art: his indomitable energy made the job seem effortless.

Mystery No. 2: Who is this dazzling beaded lady standing between Hunter Finnell and Charles Chrietzberg? Check page 10B.

Perhaps the loveliest aspect of the evening were the attendees, many of whom were cancer survivors. They wore pretty costumes and masks of all kinds, from President Balesteri's mask which she painted right on her face — talk about originality — to other gorgeous beaded and feathered dresses and masks. Just incredible!

The American Cancer Society is financed entirely by public contributions. The money raised is spent on cancer research, prevention, detection and treatment, patient services and other efforts towards ridding the world of the disease. In 1997, Community Hospital began construction of a cancer center for state-of-the-art treatment, education and support of cancer victims. For more information about the American Cancer Society, call 625-4753.

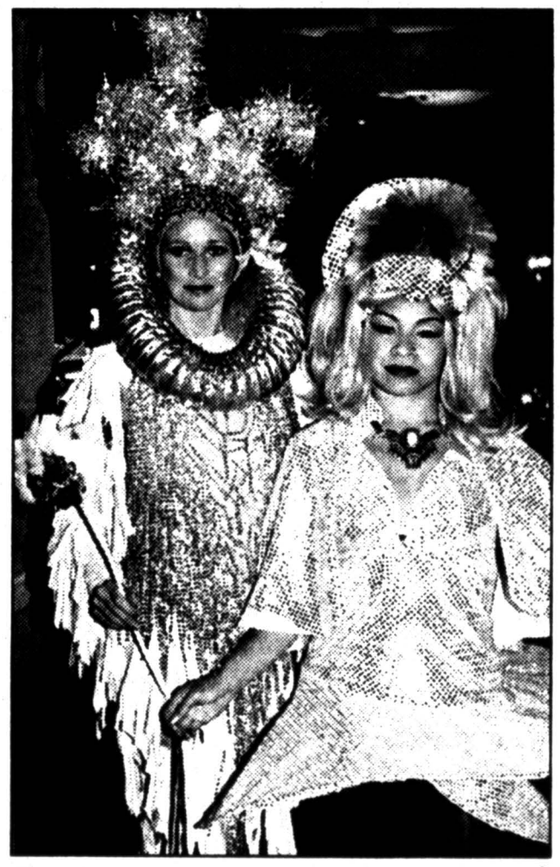
This was an evening that will long be remembered.

■ Carmel Performing Arts Festival rolls ahead

The red velvet curtain parted to reveal the exquisite dancing of the Carmel Ballet Academy's "The Red Shoes" Oct. 16 at Sunset Center as part of the Carmel Performing Arts Festival. At that moment I couldn't help but think about the negative conceptions maintained by some people when the event was in its early planning stages.

"Thousands of people will converge on Carmel; droves of tourists will cause untold traffic problems," and other remarks abounded some months back. All of that airy persiflage was erased as the festival moved into its third week, with no problems whatsoever. With great planning by Robin McKee and her board, it is a grand festival indeed. All the folks who complained about nothing to do in Carmel can certainly see how wrong they were, and those who attended some marvelous offerings, now have a view of what to expect next year.

Mystery No. 3: Hard to recognize? These two lovelies were dressed to kill at the American Cancer Society Gala Saturday, held at Spanish Bay.

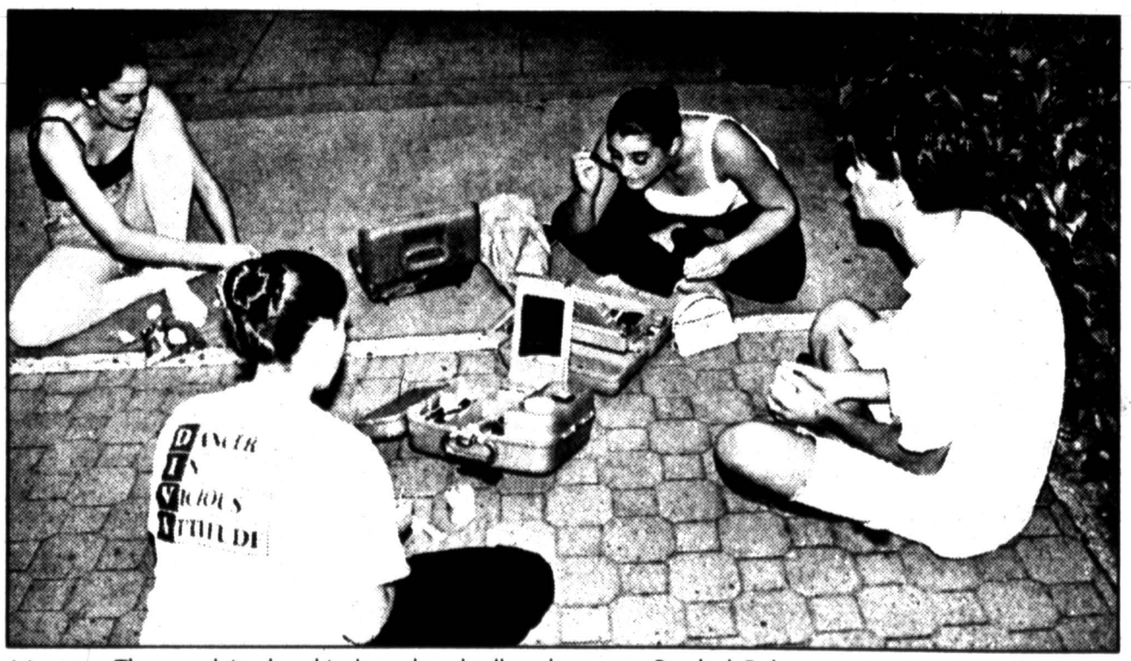


The DiFranco Dancers performed at the American Cancer Society benefit.

"The Red Shoes," again expertly presented by choreographer Carol Benton and producer Walt DeFaria, using tots to 18-year-olds, and was a complete delight throughout. Nancy Newberry came all the way from Los Angeles to recreate the lead role of the poor girl who steals the red shoes only to find that she has to keep dancing until her death. Frank Quilantang, Jr. played a villain indeed. Merissa Thummel, as the rich girl, danced beautifully; Dustin Benton made a fine impresario.

More than 250 people applauded all throughout, as The Carmel Ballet Academy once again proved its mettle.

Marisa Mahoney, Lexi Bunting and Rachel Allaire make sure their hats are on securely as they prepare to dance in 'The Red Shoes' ballet as part of The Carmel Performing Arts Festival. Bunting's grandparents, Maggie and Roger Bunting, were in the audience.



Merissa Thummel (in back) dons her ballet shoes as Rachel Felsinger, Marguerite Plum and Chris Petersen put on their makeup to prepare to dance in 'The Red Shoes' ballet at the Sunset Center.

Mezzo-soprano Elisabeth Meyer-Topsøe and Monterey County Symphony Music Director/Conductor Clark Suttle pose at the season opening concert at Sunset Theater Sunday. She was the featured artist.

■ Monterey County Symphony opens season

When Richard Wagner appeared on the European musical scene with his great dramatic operas in the late 1860s, he put almost two-thirds of sopranos out of work. Imagine being called on to sing a 20-minute recitative, three-minute aria, and then another recitative, with long passages, high Cs, Ds et. al.

Well, one who will never be unnerved by Wagner is mezzo-soprano Elisabeth Meyer-Topsøe, who wowed everyone Sunday at Monterey County Symphony's season opener, presented at Sunset Center and also part of the Carmel Performing Arts Festival. She sang the glorious Liebestod from Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde."

Topsøe's magnificent presence cannot be overpraised. Her professionalism, singing and just plain lovely-to-look at face and figure were a great joy. And there couldn't be a greater conductor for her than Clark Suttle. I watched him hold the orchestra in tow, as he awaited Topsøe's every move. What a sensitive and wonderful director he is!

The audience was awed by the entire concert. I spied Jean Cremer, Mary Graham, Mayor Ken White, Joel Weinstein and his adorable wife Bonni, Ramona and Gordon Paul Smith and Mitchell Liberman amid many others in that packed house.

The program was one of the most beautiful and interesting programs I've ever witnessed. It was filled with fabulous program notes written by erudite Monterey County Symphony Executive Director Joseph Truskot. What a coup for MCS to have someone with that kind of music history and knowledge!

I hope I'll be invited to the rest of their concerts. Isn't it just wonderful to have a professional symphony orchestra in our own backyard?

JUST IN

✓ Well, it looks like the man with the magic pen, our Bill Bates, the Pine Cone's famous cartoonist, has once again set his pen to paper and purchased the Carmel Café at Mission and Sixth. Bill indicates that the opening is scheduled for the middle of November. A big plus is that you'll also be able to see his cartoons on the walls, a masterful stroke for Bill. Best wishes, and expect us for coffee soon!

✓ When I start receiving those wonderful releases about the finest food and wine event in the world — The Masters of Food and Wine — then I know that the year is quickly coming to an end. The Masters, a world-class event, will be held Feb. 24 through March 1, 1998 at the Highlands Inn, a member of Small Luxury Hotels of the World. Reservations go fast, so call 624-3801 quickly.

✓ Tomorrow, Oct. 25, St. Mary's by-the-Sea Episcopal Church in Pacific Grove presents its lovely annual Holiday Bazaar from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

You should attend if only to see and taste their old-fashioned English tea, with scones, Devonshire cream and homemade jams. Oh, it is most delicious, and served at 2 p.m. Lunch is also served at 11 a.m.

Craft items, ornaments, toys, knitted goods, homemade jams and jellies are available. All profits go to the outreach programs to help hundreds of needy adults and children every month of the year. Admission is free. For more information call 373-4441.

Dale and Lee Olson and Ramona and Gordon Paul Smith enjoy a few moments before the opening concert of the Monterey County Symphony season.

✓ Don't forget to attend Monte Carlo Night tomorrow evening at Hidden Valley Music Seminars from 7 to 10. Game tables, slot machines, blackjack and other games will make a fun-filled evening. All proceeds will help the Carmel Valley Village Improvement Committee complete the purchase of the park addition there. Call 659-2472 for more information.

✓ Monterey County District Attorney Dean Flippo will speak at the Carmel Republican Women Federated luncheon Thursday, Oct. 30 at the Covey Restaurant at Quail Lodge. He will present the hard topic of gangs in Salinas, Seaside and Chualar. If you want to be informed about the safety of your own neighborhood, call Bev Gilbeau at 624-8098 for reservations at $20 each.

✓ The Cultural Council for Monterey County (CCMC) will hold its Seventh Annual Distinguished Benefactors of the Arts Awards Gala next Saturday, Nov. 1, 6:30 p.m. at the Monterey Plaza Hotel. The CCMC has supported numerous local arts and community groups through grants and program development since 1982, and it is the county's official arts planning agency.

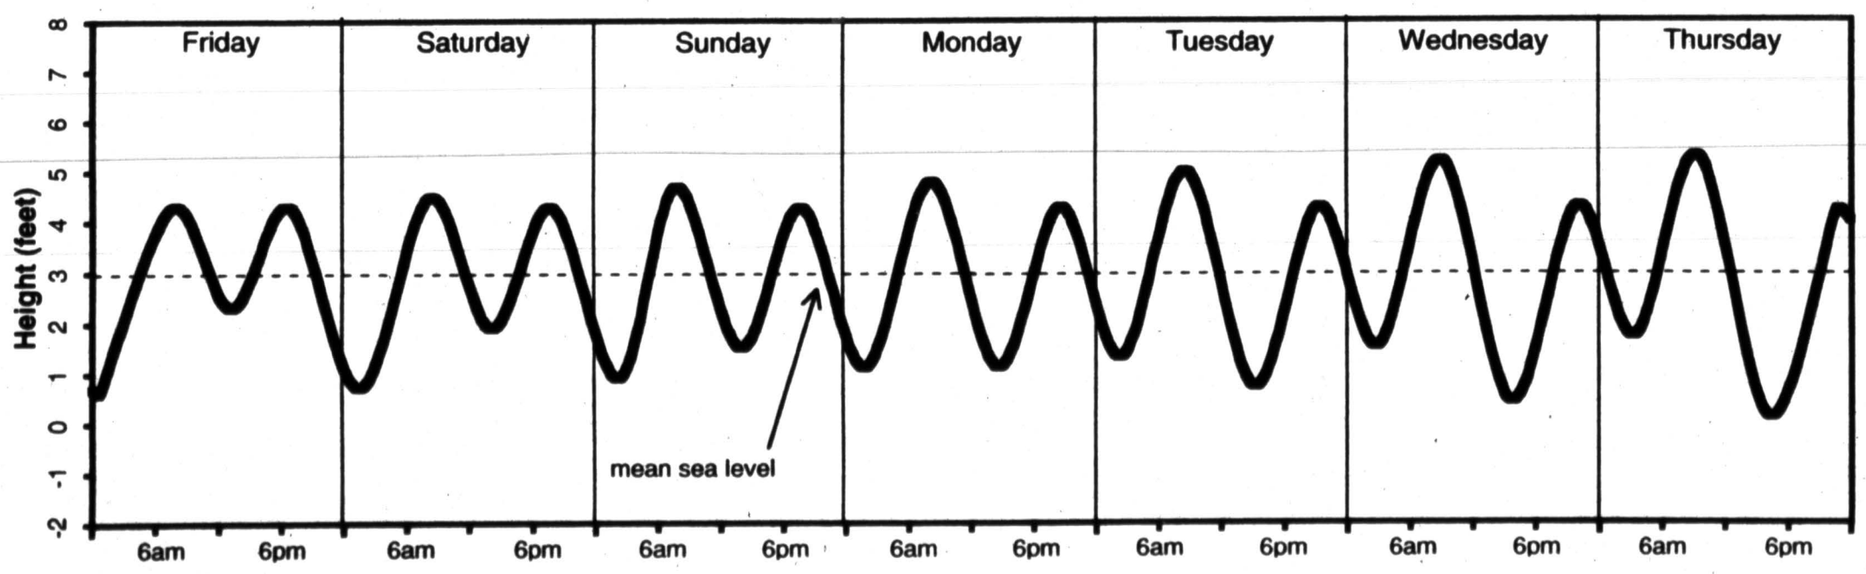
Carmel Bay Tides — October 24 to 30, 1997



• Use this chart to help plan your activities along our incomparable coastline. For example, a sunset campfire at the beach is best planned when there will not be a high tide during the evening hours. Very low tides (especially those below the zero level) provide the best opportunity to explore local tide pools. Fishing is said to be best on days when the tidal variation is greatest. And don't forget that coastal flooding and erosion can be severe when a very high tide coincides with a major storm.

• Tides are primarily caused by the pull of the moon and the sun on earth's oceans. Accordingly, the greatest tides (spring tides) occur when the sun, moon and Earth are aligned (full moon or new moon). When the sun, moon and earth form a right angle tides are smaller (neap tides).

• Every 25 hours there are two high tides and two low tides. "Mean sea level" is the average of all tides and is the same everywhere on the Earth. "Mean high tide" (approximately 4.7 feet on the tide chart) is the average of all local high tides and, in California, is the legal boundary between private coastal lands and publicly-owned tidelands. The zero on tide charts (also called the "datum") is the average of the lower of the low tides that occur in each cycle.

• Chart prepared by The Carmel Pine Cone using data provided by the National Weather Service.

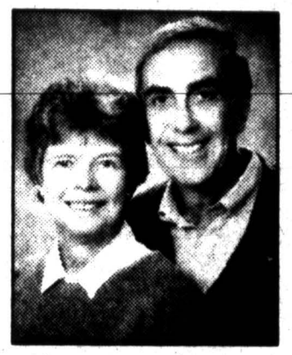
Real Estate Market— From Raging to Outrageous

Third Quarter Report

By PAUL & NELLIE BROCCHINI
Coldwell Banker Del Monte Realty Co.

Real estate agents have a hard time escaping their business. Wherever they go, people ask them, "How's the market?" Our favorite interrogator is John Wachter, whom Paul meets regularly at 6:45 AM at the Carmel Valley Racquet Club. John is a charter member of the early morning crazies who get there so early that they are leaving at 6:45.

Paul, who is not that crazy, is merely arriving at that hour. With eyes half stuck shut, Paul enters the locker room to find an agreeable John Wachter waiting with a smile and the inevitable question; "Say, Paul, how's the real estate market these days?"



"~#$%^*()," thinks Paul. What comes out is a polite, "Amazing, John, and if you want the facts wait for our next piece in The Pine Cone!"

House Talk

By Paul & Nellie Brocchini

Beyond Sensational

So, John, to make up for those early morning cursory replies, here is a full fledged report dedicated to you.

To answer your question, the market is currently beyond the "amazing" and into the realm of the outrageous. We reported in our second quarter report that the Market Barometer readings were "simply sensational" We don't know what the next level superlative is above and beyond sensational, but the readings for the third quarter are at that next level.

The Market Barometer measures the percentage of current listings that are in escrow. Since we invented the Barometer in 1989, we have considered a reading of 20% or higher to be good. Last quarter three of the 10 Monterey Peninsula Markets had readings above 30%, and seven of the 10 were above 20%. Those were strong numbers.

In the third quarter, which is the subject of this report, three of the markets have readings over 40%, five are over 30% and the two trailing markets are 27.78% and 26.67%. Combining the ten Monterey Peninsula markets the area barometer reading on October 1 was 33.90%. What this means is that one out of three houses on the market in the Monterey Peninsula are in escrow, an astounding number.

There really isn't much to say. Just look at the numbers, and let your jaw drop.

The tremendous activity is having an impact on inventory. On July 1, 1996 there were 1,015 properties on the market. By October 1 of this year that number had dropped to 767, a decline of 24%, which is one of the reasons the Barometer readings are so high.

Volume

The number of transactions remains high in spite of the shrinking inventory. There were 371 sales during the third quarter just three shy of the record 374 recorded in the second quarter. Carmel led the way with 70 transactions, down f from the amazing~ 83 in the second quarter but still very good, followed by Carmel Valley with 58 and Pacific Grove with 47.

Prices

It is always difficult to get a handle on prices as the median bounces around from quarter to quarter. It is best to compare year to year figures, but we still try to figure out what is going on in the middle of the fray. Even though the numbers we show in the "Median Sales Price Comparison" chart seem to be all over the place, we know from our business and from what we see in the incredibly successful office in which we work that prices are up.

We have noted, for example, an interesting change in the pricing of spec houses in Carmel's famed "Golden Rectangle," Dolores to Scenic, Ocean Ave. to Santa Lucia., on standard 40' x 100' lots. A year or so ago those houses were priced in the low to mid $700,000 range. Today, asking prices are at least $100,000 higher, and buyers are snapping them up.

It is a simple case of supply and demand. Supply is shrinking, demand is increasing. Add to that the fact that Northern California seems to be awash in money, and you have a formula for upward prices.

Holiday Lull?

Will the last quarter take some of the steam out of this market? We doubt it. The real estate market on the Monterey Peninsula is not seasonal. It does not revolve around school semesters or job transfers. It is a 12-month market. The current bull market started in the fourth quarter of 1995, after three weak quarters. With the high number of properties in escrow we will have a high number of closings during the quarter.

Whether or not buyers are going to continue to show up with the enthusiasm for buying that they have been demonstrating over the past two years is not certain. But we would not bet against it.

Decision on Golub house put off again

In an unusual move Wednesday night, the Planning Commission approved a height 'variance' for a house and then turned around and denied the use permit for the project to go ahead. The commission decided that while it could approve the height variance in theory, it couldn't issue a permit that would increase the "non-conformities" of a building that already exceeded set limits.

Attorneys for the Orville and Elena Golub called the decision ridiculous.

The Golubs, Bel Air residents who hope to retire in Carmel, have been battling the city for years over their plans to redesign their house on San Antonio Ave.

Carmel Stone falls under microscope at Planning Commission: Suburbia or quaint village?

By TAMARA GRIPPI

Stonework on buildings, often a detail of design, received the lion's share of attention when the Carmel Planning Commission considered two projects at a meeting earlier this month week.

While some commissioners were simply concerned about Carmel Stone being used in a consistent fashion on both the front and back of a home they were considering, others seemed to question whether there should be any stone at all.

"I personally am getting concerned about the gratuitous application of Carmel Stone," said Commissioner Pope Coleman. "It smells of suburbia to me."

"I think the opposite is true," said John Mandurrago, the designer of both projects. "You see a myriad of homes (in suburbia) with just plaster and metal windows. Carmel conjures up images of cute little houses with cute details and Carmel stone."

Is the planning commission turning away from Carmel Stone?

"Not at all," said Commission Chairwoman Yoko Whitaker. "The concern is that (stone) not look like 'facade-ism'. The stonework should be integrated throughout the design — not one house in front and another in back."

Foundation 'senior' zoning confirmed

By TAMARA GRIPPI

WHILE THE third time wasn't a charm for the Carmel Foundation to get its expansion plans approved at the Carmel Planning Commission Wednesday, the 50-year-old senior service organization did get its main Lincoln Street property approved as A3, a special older adult zone.

Recognizing the property as the A3 zone — which was overwhelmingly approved by a 1973 voter initiative — was one goal of foundation leaders. Revisions in the city's general plan in the 1980s listed the foundation in some places as A3 and in other places as R1 (residential) leaving some question as to its status.

The Foundation wants to expand its operations into a house directly behind the current facility. The Planning Commission deferred consideration of that issue until its Nov. 19 meeting.

"We get the impression, I am sorry to say, that the Planning Commission is principally concerned with gaining some measure of control over what goes on at the Carmel Foundation," said foundation president Bill Felch.

Carmel Vignette

Gang Scuffles of Yesteryear

IT WAS recess period and six-year-old Glenn Leidig was doing the usual thing — running about, chatting in his outgoing manner with schoolmates here and there.

The time was 80 years ago. The place was the Sunset School, right where the Sunset Cultural Center is now.

The young Leidig's ears suddenly perked up. There was some commotion coming from the bottom of the hill on Mission Street. Curiosity was just too great to resist: he wandered down the hill.

What Glenn found was almost too much to handle for this 2nd grader. It turned out that a group of "older boys" from school had recently seen a western at the movie theater. (These boys, by the way, were really older since in those days you actually stayed in grammar school until you learned your three R's — that is, readin', writin' and 'rithmatic.)

This western film — black and white and silent, of course — had featured an apparently unforgettable scene in which some Indians had been tied to a tree and the brush around them had been set on fire.

The teenagers, thinking to recreate that thrilling scene, had kidnapped a 12-year-old, George Aulcourt, and, over his truly strenuous objections, had tied him to an old scrub oak. And by the time Glenn had reached the scene (the commotion being caused by poor George's yells for help), the boys had already built a circle of brush around the hapless youngster — and lit it.

Glenn's horror at the scene finally sprung him into action and he raced back up the hill and into the school, screaming:

"Mrs.Powers! They're burning him! They're gonna set him on fire!!"

Mary Powers, the formidable principal of Sunset School, was unforgettable in her own right.

Years later, Glenn's memory of her charge to the rescue remains vivid: "She had a bun of white hair above her head, she wore glasses, and she must have weighed a sturdy 200 pounds — a real powerful woman," he recalls.

Still rolling with laughter at the memory, Glenn adds, "When she ran out that day, she was just like a Sherman Tank moving flat out at full speed down that hill!"

The "tank" went right through the burning bush, untied the hysterical George, put out the fire, and took George by the hand back up to the school followed by the sheepish teens. Punishment was swiftly meted out.

Recess was over.

POLICE LOG

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Vehicle towed from 8th and San Carlos. Registration expired six months ago and there were $185 in outstanding parking citations on file.

Carmel area: Reports came in from a priest that two of his parishioners on Taylor Road were having a disagreement concerning marital financial matters. When the sheriff got there, the male was gone and the female reports no physical violence, only a verbal disagreement.

Carmel area: Under the Carmel River Bridge, two men were contacted by the sheriff because they had built camp and were apparently getting ready to stay for the night. They were in a no trespassing area and agreed to leave. They made a new camp just 20 yards from the old one. Sheriff cited them.

Carmel Valley: Man from Carmel Valley contacted inside his car where he appeared to be extremely ill. Man had a large amount of fluid built up around his ankles, multiple bruising, skin tone pale yellow and eyes bright yellow. Ambulance dispatched and determined man to have liver failure. Man taken to CHOMP.

Carmel Valley: A man on El Caminito reported receiving a harassing call from his son, 30, in Iowa. Son had just dropped out of drug rehab and man wanted the call documented for future reference.

Carmel Valley: A woman reports her neighbor, on Buena Vista Del Rio, cut down several of her trees. Neighbor reports it was done by accident and promises to compensate woman for her loss.

Pebble Beach: On Forest Lake Road the report of $1,414 worth of camera equipment was reported stolen from a locked locker. Man said he had no idea that anyone might have the combination and that no one had permission to be in the locker. He also has no idea who could have done it.

Pebble Beach: At Los Altos Road, a man called to report that he is receiving annoying phone calls at his residence and believes they are coming from his employer, a parcel service in Louisville, Ky.

Pebble Beach: On Chamisal, a gas credit card belonging to a woman was found in a driveway.

Pebble Beach: A man on Madrone Court found a package addressed to him on his porch that the postal service had not delivered. No postage or return address was on it; an investigation revealed that the package was safe.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Carmel man (20) arrested at Junipero and 12th for driving under the influence of drugs and for hit and run. His heart stopped possibly due to crack cocaine interaction and he was transported to CHOMP. Also had several outstanding warrants.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Private investigator from Long Beach arrested for DUI at San Carlos and 8th after hitting parked vehicle and driving away.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Report of a fight at inn near Mission. Upon arrival parties were gone.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A wedding party at Lincoln and 7th was spilling into the roadway. Office advised them to get on the sidewalk.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: A storm drain on Scenic was off its mounting and half-way down the drain shaft. Office coned off the area and notified public works.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Assisted elderly couple on Casanova in removing a dead animal.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Loud party on Casanova — notified on municipal code violation. Music volume lowered.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Verbal dispute at Carpenter & 3rd about their relationship. No violence reported. Admonished. Nothing to report.

Carmel-by-the-Sea: Subject admonished at San Antonio & 13th for commercial construction on Sunday. Work was stopped. Warning only — no citation.

Carmel area: Mother on Taylor reports her 16-year-old daughter had run away from home and was probably in the company of two 20-year-old girlfriends.

Carmel area: Two men reported that their truck was vandalized by the ex-girlfriend of one of the men.

Carmel Valley: On Village Drive, several parties reported hearing two gun shots in the vicinity. Area check conducted revealing no source of the gun shots.

Carmel Valley: A young woman reported being in a verbal disagreement with her ex-boyfriend on Paso Hondo Road. Parties contacted and it was determined to be a verbal disagreement only.

Pebble Beach: A person on Forrest Lodge Road reports a dog barking at the neighboring house for four days. Security requested a welfare check that revealed an open door and no occupants. Another neighbor claimed to be watching the house and knew the doors were unlocked.

what its portion of the 1998-99 Carmel Regional Fire Ambulance (CRFA) budget will be — based on call volume. A member of our council sits on the CRFA Board and participates in making decisions for its operation. When Carmel's portion is determined, the Council will offset that amount with $100,000 from general fund monies and then set the tax assessment figure for Carmel property.

The reason the Council decided (5-O) to put the funding measure on the ballot in November is to provide a stable funding source as opposed to being reliant on general fund monies which may or may not be available in any fiscal year. The Council felt, as did the citizens' ambulance committee, that a parcel tax would allow Carmel residents to continue their excellent ambulance service with stable funding and local control.

I would suggest that our city is not trying to avoid its basic responsibility for ambulance service; on the contrary, in agreeing to supplement parcel tax monies with general fund monies, they are facing their responsibility in a partnership with its residents.

"Taxes not inherently bad"

Dear Editor:

Last week in Letters To The Editor, was a letter by a gentleman against the up-coming Ambulance Parcel Tax and I got the faint impression this person is a very anti-tax, anti-government person and he has the fight to be so. However, I believe taxes and government are not inherently bad. Taxes provide the money to pay for the services we must receive to have a comfortable society.

Carmel has chosen over the years to be a City dependent on the collection of taxes from sources outside the City. Some 65% of our income is provided by our tourist trade in taxes such as hotels, motels, gas, stores and restaurant sales and even from parking tickets. The problem for Carmel is that the tourist trade is about as stable as the stock market. Anything can and does effect this income, such as bad weather across the nation, severe earthquakes in California, down turn in general economy or just a decision by the public to stay home for awhile. Every year, come budget time, income is only an educated guess, and as we all know the City has just gone through some very bad years. I believe strongly that we should not gamble each year on the tourists supporting our ambulance. We must be able to have the best Emergency Medical Services possible - every year into the future, come good times or bad times.

Please vote YES on Measure B.

Important things "unsaid" in Pebble Beach stories

Dear Editor:

Your articles "Two projects approved in Pebble Beach Company's 'best week'" was notable for what was unsaid.

The Pebble Beach Company is obligated under the approved Local Coastal Plan (LCP) to provide numerous Stillwater Cove Beach access items such as a pedestrian walkway, information booths, security gate houses, clearly marked visitor parking, etc.. The Pebble Beach Company had done none of these things at the time I and others appealed this project to the Coastal Commission and made an issue of company's violations. The Pebble Beach Company ignored some of their obligations under the LCP for more than ten years. The Coastal Commission staff was only requiring compliance. Unfortunately, no sanctions were imposed.

Important issues on the Pebble Beach Company's proposed lot and golf course development were not adequately explained in your article. For example, it is true the land use plan has zoning that would permit 900 lots if the infrastructure (water, traffic, sewers) supported them. Under current conditions 900 lots would never be developed. For Mr. Stilwell to claim reduction in lots from 900 to 316 is simply sophistry. It is even questionable if the infrastructure will support 316 lots. The company's often-repeated claim that it is reducing its development by 65% is truly misleading.

The proposed golf course, as with Casa Palmero, represents an unnecessary and unwanted increase in commercial activity in the Del Monte Forest. Everyone should recognize that the Pebble Beach Company's golf courses in the Del Monte Forest are commercial operations not recreational as Pacific Grove's municipal golf course is. It is the Del Monte Forest residents that take the brunt of increasing commercialism and intensification of special events hosted by the Pebble Beach Company.

The Del Monte Forest residents' property is valued at almost three times the value of the Pebble Beach Company's property. We have a lot at stake. There must be a balance between the visitors, the Pebble Beach Company and the residents. The company is pushing for too much.

Hates "slick lawyers"

Dear Editor:

Your report on the Board of Supervisors debate regarding the issue of the Highlands Inn converting to time share units was well-written and informative. However, maybe you should have refrained from giving the Hyatt's lawyer, Tony Lombardo, a forum to inaccurately characterize and insult residents of Carmel Highlands, whose only motivation is to protect public safety and preserve this beautiful area.

Mr. Lombardo mistakenly accused all opponents of the time share scheme of being the same group who had opposed other projects. For many of us, including myself, this is the first local issue that has caused us to become involved. You also quoted him as stating, "These people hate everything." Please allow me to respond. No, Mr. Lombardo we are not a homogeneous group and we do not hate everything. Speaking only for myself, I do hate liars and I particularly hate slick lawyers who consistently represent big money interests against citizens trying to protect the environment.

Local contributions "scandal"

Dear Editor:

First, let me congratulate KIRSTIE WILDE on her HIGHLANDS TIME SHARE piece. Truly first class. This whole HIGHLANDS TIMESHARE debacle IS reaching WHITE HOUSE style scandal.

First, we are being told that the entire County Board of Supervisors might be in CONTEMPT OF COURT, REGARDING CARMEL RANCHO PROJECT.

Now we know that County Supervisor DAVE POTTER took money from the HIGHLANDS INN. He won't vote on the timeshare deal, why, "APPEARANCE OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST." He took MONEY FROM THE HIGHLANDS INN.

ITEM: BILL PHILLIPS, of the County Planning recommends to the County Supervisors to approve the timeshare deal. PHILLIPS is also a close friend of DAVE POTTER. PHILLIPS allegedly attended a Dinner at the Sardine Factory last December given by PATRICIA SMITH RAMSEY, former owner of the Highlands Inn. She had meetings with the HYATT people, in support of the Highlands timeshares. Ms. Ramsey is also represented by lawyer LOMBARDO in her own Real Estate deals. TALKING ABOUT CONFLICT OF INTEREST.

So now we wonder how many other County Supervisors are receiving moneys or favors by the HYATT people and the HIGHLANDS INN..

This whole deal smacks of corruption. IT SHOULD BE INVESTIGATED.

The binding force of the proponents is a steadfast and reckless disregard of the truth.. As for DAVE POTTER, he should RESIGN NOW or FACE RE-CALL.

In closing let me quote MARK TWAIN "The only opinion worth considering is that of the PUBLIC."

"Wilson wanted to bring Carmel Pres into new era"

Dear Editor:

The recent ordeal of Pastor Jon Wilson, formerly of Carmel Presbyterian Church, reminds me of the old saying, "It's the pioneers who take the arrows."

Though not belonging to CPC. my family has attended Jon Wilson's services on several occasions. I enjoy his weekly column in the Herald and look forward to his monthly appearance on "The Eric Scheck Show" on KOMY 1340 in Santa Cruz. He is an individual who is never afraid to tackle controversial issues and is willing to defend the Biblical Christian world view at any time in a calm and reasonable manner.

The Evangelical Christian church is definitely on the move on the Monterey Peninsula. With the emergence of Calvary Chapel Monterey Bay, with their new facility on Highway 68, Shoreline Church in Pacific Grove, offering a radically different church experience, and now Sonrise Christian Fellowship, seeking to establish itself in Carmel and Carmel Valley, old church formulas need to be reexamined. A church must not only hold to essential Christian doctrine. but do so with a message, music and style that is relevant to a "boomer" generation that is looking for meaning and returning to church.

I believe Jon Wilson wanted desperately to bring CPC into this new era. but many in his congregation were not ready to.

I pray that Carmel Presbyterian gets past this sad time and moves forward. I believe that to seek a return to the quaint, non controversial little church in downtown Carmel would be a mistake.

Either way, I'm sure that a man of Jon Wilson's caliber will do well wherever he goes.

Paul J. Ingram, Carmel Valley

Herald workers win key support

Readers group organizes to provide help, monitor Knight-Ridder

Peninsula Free Press staff report

Miami-based Knight-Ridder, Inc. may have met its match in Monterey.

A broad-based coalition of community leaders and residents organized Oct. 15 to protest Knight-Ridder's takeover tactics at The Monterey County Herald. Among its first actions was an endorsement of a campaign to gather cancellation pledges from Herald readers.

The formation of the coalition, called the Herald Readers' Committee, demonstrates the community's resolve in restoring justice and fairness at The Herald.

"The endorsement of our pledge campaign will open the door to collecting thousands of cancellation forms," said Luther Jackson, executive officer of San Jose Newspaper Guild/CWA Local 39098, which represents most Herald employees.

Circulation pledge campaign gains momentum. See story, Page 3.

Since taking over The Herald Aug. 24, Knight-Ridder has erased union contracts, cut staff, used more temporary workers and reduced pay for new hires — moves likely to increase employee turnover.

Herald managing editor Bruce Baumann recently caused concern when, at a staff meeting, he identified The Herald as a "farm club" for Knight-Ridder — a training ground for younger employees who don't intend to stay in Monterey.

"Effective coverage of a community requires people who know the community," Jackson said. "Creating a revolving door at The Herald by cutting pay and encouraging turnover cannot possibly do anything but harm the newspaper."

Many leaders of the readers group already have written letters to Knight-Ridder CEO Tony Ridder and to Herald publisher Patricia Keil, or have led delegations to the paper to discuss their concerns.

That kind of work will continue, but the group plans to expand its activity.

"Readers rely on The Herald for important information," Jackson said. "If Knight-Ridder is more interested in profit-taking than investing in the newspaper, readers have a stake in that decision."

The readers group is led by chairman Richard Criley, executive director of the American Civil Liberties Union in Monterey. Other members include leaders from religious, labor, community and academic organizations.

(For more information on this story and related news about The Herald's takeover, please visit our World Wide Web site at www.sjguild.org.)*

The high cost of greed

Workers, community pay the price for Knight-Ridder's profit-boosting move

Peninsula Free Press staff report

Greater profits. Complete control.

Those four words best summarize why Miami-based Knight-Ridder, Inc. embarked on the destructive path that began with firing employees of The Monterey County Herald on Aug. 24.

The tool Knight-Ridder used to achieve its goal is known as an "asset sale" — a transaction that can be used to eliminate employees' union contracts. Legally, employees aren't assets, so they and their union contracts don't have to be assumed by a new owner.

The asset sale paved the way for Knight-Ridder to squeeze greater profits from The Herald by cutting labor costs.

"Whether or not what they did is legal doesn't make it right," said Linda Foley, president of The Newspaper Guild-CWA, the international union which represents most Herald workers. "Knight-Ridder's actions in Monterey violate every basic notion of human decency. We will make them accountable."

Transaction may have been more than a 'swap.' See story, Page 2.

Getting greater profits

No one argues that The Herald, under the ownership of E.W. Scripps Co., wasn't making a healthy profit. But Knight-Ridder, led by CEO Tony Ridder, demands profit margins of at least 20 percent from its newspapers, according to The Wall Street Journal. Recent internal documents show some Knight-Ridder newspapers are earning profits of greater than 30 percent — a phenomenal rate of return even in the highly profitable newspaper industry.

'Some old friends have lost their jobs, and I can't understand why'

By Bonnie Gartshore

My career in journalism has taken me from hot type to cold hearts. I started out to the sound of linotypes; large headlines were still hand-set. We typed our stories on cut-up pieces of newsprint, our fingers pressing the keys of manual typewriters. We took notes with soft-lead pencils on folded sheets of copy paper. We spent more time face to face then on the phone. The paper's owner knew the community, loved the community, was part of the community.

As the years passed, new technologies made newspapering easier, quicker and quieter. Reporters became typesetters, too. Small tape recorders backed up written notes. We all carried notebooks and ball-point pens. Telephone interviews became the rule; face to face the exception. More and more local newspapers became part of large and small newspaper chains, headquartered far away. That morning "thud" on the front porch signaled the delivery of — in their business-dominated language — a "product."

For me, it was exciting to learn new skills and a new jargon, at the same time retaining the excitement of meeting many different kinds of people, listening to their stories and sharing those stories with the readers.

Though I left newspapers for a few years — developing a teaching career and working for an advertising and public relations agency — I kept in touch through free-lance stories and public relations submissions.

I came back to The Herald gradually; first, being

Companies insist transaction involved no cash

Scripps reports gain of $21 million from 'swap' of two papers for Boulder Daily Camera

Peninsula Free Press staff report

Knight-Ridder, Inc. apparently struck a hard bargain in gaining two newspapers from E.W. Scripps Co. for the price of one, judging from transfer tax documents filed with county officials.

Knight-Ridder chairman and chief executive officer P. Anthony Ridder adamantly stated on July 25 that no cash was involved in the swap of its Boulder Daily Camera in Colorado for The Monterey County Herald and San Luis Obispo Telegram-Tribune in California.

Scripps reported in its corporate third-quarter statement "a gain of $21 million" as a result of the swap. Scripps spokesman Rich Boehne said "absolutely no cash was involved in the trade," and that the gain was just part of accrual accounting. Scripps also reported an after-tax gain of $11.1 million in connection with the swap.

Transfer taxes paid in connection with the swap show the real property assets of the Boulder paper were valued at $10.56 million; The Herald's real property was valued at $6.45 million. San Luis Obispo County officials refused to disclose the transfer taxes, which had been filed as confidential by Knight-Ridder executives.

A closer look at the valuation of The Herald, which was assessed at $17.7 million in 1996-97, and the Telegram-Tribune, which was assessed at $10.99 million for 1996-97, raises the question of the true value of the Boulder Daily Camera in the deal. In other words, was there an unreported amount of cash involved?

Patricia Keil, who was named publisher of The Herald by Knight-Ridder shortly after the trade was announced, declined comment, saying, "I really don't know the details of the transaction."

All three papers have similar weekday circulation totals — about 35,000 — though the San Luis Obispo paper doesn't publish on Sundays. The Boulder paper may have a greater "intrinsic" value because of the circulation and advertising war Scripps' Rocky Mountain News is waging with the Denver Post, owned by Dean Singleton.

"This has absolutely nothing to do with the value of the newspapers. Goodwill has to be factored in," said John Morton, a media analyst in Silver Spring, Md. Morton speculated that, "It could be that there was some cash involved."

Other observers note that E.W. Scripps executives have long considered Boulder a key to gaining dominance in Denver for the Rocky Mountain News.

Said a Scripps executive of the Boulder acquisition: "Boulder is not just any old newspaper."

Goodbye to one of the finest in the business

Tom Wieder retires after four decades as a Herald journalist

Peninsula Free Press staff report

When a man retires after nearly 40 years working for The Herald — under three different owners -- we might expect some public acknowledgement of not only the longevity of service, but the quality of his work.

When Tom Weider, who came to The Herald in 1958, chose not to apply for the copy editor job he had been doing so well, not to take the 5-hour test to see if he was worthy of being rehired, his retirement went by without official notice.

But, his co-workers, those who are still on the staff, miss his quiet humor, his sharp eye and his questioning mind.

Before he became a copy editor, Tom was as meticulous and careful as a reporter, moving through the intricacies of local politics and other "beats," producing clean and complete stories for Herald readers. His sense of humor even turned up in news stories when appropriate.

Alan McEwen

Known as The Herald's "resident grammarian," Tom Wieder, pictured here with one of his four cats, retired as a copy editor in August from The Herald after nearly 40 years.

Tom and his wife, Sally, who wrote a gardening column at The Herald before her death, took great pleasure in the garden at their home on Josselyn Canyon Road, and Tom often brought in choice blooms to be photographed for the garden page.

Tom's Guild brothers and sisters wish him many happy retirement years ahead.

Knight-Ridder's rules for Herald employees

Herald employees are now working under the terms of a Knight-Ridder, Inc. employee handbook. That handbook, which replaced union contracts, eliminated basic protections they had in their contract with the previous owner. Here are a few of its provisions:

Expression

- "Distribution of literature of any type or description by employees during working time is prohibited."
- "Distribution of literature of any type or description in working areas is prohibited."
- "Postings are limited to Company-related materials. All other postings require the express approval of Human Resources. No postings are permitted for any other purpose."

Privacy

- "An employee cannot expect privacy rights to extend to work-related conduct or the use of Company-owned equipment or supplies." This includes e-mail, voice mail and desks.
- "The Company reserves the right to search its premises at any time for Company property or Company-related information."
- "You should avoid bringing to work items of a personal nature that you would not want to reveal to the Company."

Due process, security

- "Employment at the Company is at-will and may be terminated for any reason, with or without cause or notice at any time."
- "The Company reserves the right to outsource or contract any or all functions of the newspaper."
- "The Company reserves full discretion to modify provisions of the handbook or the policies on which it is based at any time, for any reason, with or without notice."

asked to edit one or two special sections and, eventually, most of the 30-plus special sections published each year. I became a staff member, also writing a weekly historical column, selecting poetry for publication, seeking out "Olden Times" items and writing occasional feature articles.

With this long experience in both writing and editing, it was a demoralizing experience to be fired and invited to apply for my old job, as if I were just starting out. I was tested to see if I was capable of doing what I had been capably doing for years. Then, along with fellow former staff members, I nervously awaited "the call" to be rehired.

Some of us were rehired; some received another kind of call. Old friends and colleagues were told they were not up to the new owner's standards.

The first day under The Herald's new management, there were attempts by management to make it seem a happy occasion. When the new publisher stopped by my desk and said she was concerned because I seemed upset when I arrived at work that day, I was surprised that this seemingly friendly person didn't understand.

"Of course I am upset," I responded. "Some old friends have lost their jobs, and I can't understand why."

"We'll get through this," she said. "Just do your best work."

Through the whole testing and interview process nobody caught on that for nearly 50 years I have been doing my best work, just as my mother taught me to. "Do it for yourself," my mother said, "not for any reward, but because you can do it."

Maybe that kind of approach went out with hot type.

So, despite its claim of being the chain known for the quality of its newspapers, Knight-Ridder's first move in Monterey was to increase its profits. It did so in this way:

- slashing the work force, with the most firings occurring in the newsroom;
- eliminating negotiated pay increases scheduled into 1999;
- eliminating all negotiated pay premiums, such as for working in higher-skilled jobs;
- using more temporary and contract workers; and
- creating a two-tiered pay system by hiring new employees at a lower rate than current employees.

The unionized work force, which totaled 180 before Knight-Ridder, now totals about 130.

"Taken together, this is Knight-Ridder's recipe for making a quick killing at The Herald," said Luther Jackson, executive officer of the San Jose Newspaper Guild/CWA Local 39098. "This isn't about quality. This is about extracting excessive profits on the backs of employees."

Consolidating control

Knight-Ridder consolidated control of the paper through actions designed to promote fear. In a span of about two weeks, the following events occurred:

- all employees were told they would be fired;
- employees who wanted their jobs back were told they would have to compete against outside applicants;
- an out-of-town security force with a long history of provocative behavior occupied the building;
- 25 employees — most Herald veterans — who applied for jobs were formally rejected;
- Knight-Ridder ripped down employees' union bulletin boards and banned unauthorized posting of notices;
- Knight-Ridder placed restrictions on personal liberties, such as the right to privacy and the right to take a second job;
- all employees officially became "at-will" — subject to dismissal for any reason or no reason at all, with no recourse;
- all union contract protections were erased.

"They executed it like a military maneuver," said Herald employee Russ Cain, a long-time Guild activist who helped to organize a union at the Herald 25 years ago. "They secured the building. They cut our lines of communication. They spread disinformation. They tried to control us through fear.

"I don't think they thought twice about the moral implications — the human implications — of their actions," Cain said. "For them, causing the firings and the disruption was a means to an end. And now they've got their end: more money."

The profits come at a steep cost to employees: not merely lost wages, but feelings of anger, pain, betrayal and resentment. The result, said Herald employee and Guild leader Symantha Miller, is that it's difficult for many to show up to work each day.

"Our members are hurting," Miller said. "The ones who were fired are hurting the most. But those of us who got our jobs back are hurting, too. We miss our friends who were fired. Some of us feel guilty for making it back in. It's hard for many of us to walk into that building after what Knight-Ridder did."

The stress is made more difficult by the cutbacks. One pressroom employee has routinely worked seven-day weeks since the takeover.

As for the future, Knight-Ridder's velvety public statements about negotiating in good faith for new union contracts conceal an iron-fisted strategy. That strategy is simple: make demands that fundamentally undermine union and employee rights, and, in so doing, frustrate any attempts to reach agreement.

Knight-Ridder actually is proposing conditions that are worse than those it already has implemented. The goal, said company attorney Derek Woodhouse on Oct. 6, is for the company to maintain "as much control as possible."

Said Guild executive officer Jackson: "We think the employees and the community will have something to say about that before this is over."

Cancellation pledge campaign gathers momentum, signatures

Peninsula Free Press staff report

When Knight-Ridder announced its plans for The Monterey County Herald in early August, hundreds of community members responded by cancelling their subscriptions to the newspaper.

Since Knight-Ridder's acquisition of The Herald, not a day has passed without calls from subscribers to Herald employees or their strike headquarters, all asking this question: Should I cancel my subscription?

> 'Knight-Ridder has to understand our resolve and the resolve of the community.'
> Luther Jackson

Not quite yet, said Luther Jackson, executive officer for the San Jose Newspaper Guild/CWA Local 39098, which represents most Herald employees.

Instead, employees are asking subscribers to sign a "pledge" which, when collected throughout the community, will create the real threat of thousands of cancellations if Knight-Ridder refuses to bargain responsibly and to repair the damage it has done to employees' lives.

Organizations representing more than 20,000 members, including labor and community groups, have backed the cancellation pledge drive. The campaign offers a way for community members to express their support for friends, neighbors and family members who work at The Herald, and to send a message to Knight-Ridder that its actions since acquiring The Herald have been unethical and irresponsible.

By firing every employee, by eliminating union contracts, and by erasing basic rights, Knight-Ridder's actions in Monterey seem to represent an all-too-common story of corporations that have lost touch with basic standards of decency.

"The concept of the pledge is simple and powerful," Jackson said. " By signing, community members show their support for us by giving us the ability to cancel their subscriptions at a later date — if that's necessary."

The pledge form can be returned by mail to the offices of the Monterey Council of Newspaper Unions at 8 Harris Court, Suite E6, Monterey 93940.

"We want a strong, healthy Herald," Jackson said. "If Knight-Ridder continues on its destructive path, it's impossible to imagine a Herald that is strong or healthy. We hope this can be worked out without cancelling subscriptions, but Knight-Ridder has to understand our resolve and the resolve of the community."

Herald employees are educating the community about the pledge campaign and Knight-Ridder's actions through a speakers bureau, which has met with community organizations, unions, elected officials and religious groups. Other volunteers are going door to door to meet with their neighbors.

Community members who would like a Herald union employee to speak to their organization can call 333-9016.

The following letters were written to Knight-Ridder executives by community members regarding the takeover of The Herald. They are reproduced here with permission of the authors.

Treat Herald employees fairly

Dear Patricia Keil
Herald Publisher

I found your full page letter in The Herald to be superficial, condescending and arrogant.

You have anxiety? What about employees who don't know the fate of their jobs?

Your family wants to know "What the heck is going on?" Why not tell them the truth? It's called union busting and that the people of this "enchanting" area are more sophisticated than you thought — we know about Detroit!

I didn't buy your attempt to minimize the real issues. I won't buy the paper or anything from its advertisers if you continue to be unfair to employees and break their union.

Honor Herald contracts

Dear Patricia Keil
Herald Publisher

Just a note to request that you get out and hear what the community is saying about the treatment of the staff at The Herald under the new ownership. The staff members live in our community with their families. They have provided a valuable service to our community in their jobs. They have negotiated a contract to do their work and that contract needs to be valued and continued. Firing employees is certainly not an act of good faith! Making them take tests to prove their abilities, after they have proven such in their jobs under the Scripps ownership, is a real slap in the face.

I hope you will make every effort to honor these fine employees, call back the pink slips and work with them to achieve the goals of your newspaper.

The Herald has been coming to my home since 1957. It is very important that our county has the very best coverage so it can meet the needs of a democracy ... that of an educated electorate.

Ruth Vreeland, vice mayor
Monterey

'Snow job advertisements don't fool anyone'

Dear Patricia Keil
Herald Publisher

Enclosed please find a copy of a letter to the editor, which I submitted Aug. 28, 1997. To date I have received NO response. Beyond the points I made in my previous letter, I would like to comment to you, as you have requested, about your "Clarifying the Issues" column in last Sunday's paper (Sept. 7).

You seem to be quite adept at hypocritical phraseology. This is not New York, not even San Jose, and in a more close-knit community, we DO care about what happens to the employees at The Herald. The statement that 22 people were not "offered jobs" really means they were fired! The process that you describe as "wrenching" has actually been more like disastrous. Your attempt to put a cheerful face on the situation by saying you know "the healing has begun" is not echoed by your employees.

What guarantee is there that at some point in the near future, you will not find it impossible to "match" positions available with these qualified people, since the people you fired were also qualified. You forgot to mention the people who were on staff and are now "free-lance," no security there.

The manner in which Knight-Ridder has steam-rolled The Herald employees is nothing short of callous and ill-advised. The snow-job editorials and advertisements don't fool anyone in this community.

Knight Ridder has gotten off on the wrong foot on this peninsula and doesn't seem to care, but we subscribers, we consumers who know your advertisers, will be watching this situation very carefully. There are many ways one can show support for Herald employees and there are many of us already distressed at what has occurred. This is not "union rhetoric." This is your community speaking.

Laura Bayless
Carmel Valley

Don't underestimate the resolve of this community

Dear Mindi Kiernan
Vice President, Knight-Ridder, Inc.

Knight-Ridder is too remote from the Monterey Peninsula to have a sense of the spirit of our city-state aggregate of towns. Herald employees are and have always been rooted in this piebald community and have served it well. Consequently, they should be continued in their current jobs with negotiated union contracts instead of being subjected to humiliation, anxiety and scorn. Yes, some changes in management are necessary to bind the paper to your general organization, but after reading the full page statements in The Herald and in The Coast Weekly by Patricia T. Keil, publisher-to-be, I conclude that no one who writes such murky, clumsy prose should be the publisher of any newspaper or, for that matter, of anything else. All of which leads me to hope that other changes in management conform to a higher standard.

Two years ago, ignorant absentee owners and managers provoked a strike by the Safeway employees. Here on the Peninsula, which abounds with rich people, retirees, professionals, etc., and despite Safeway's employment of strike-breaker replacements — abruptly the parking lots of all the stores were virtually empty and hardly anyone crossed the picket lines. As with any strike, everybody lost money, but despite that, the strikers won the new contract they deserved, one they should have had in the first place. Before you provoke a strike at The Herald, it would be to everyone's advantage that you study the Safeway and UPS strikes, and seriously consider re-employing all Herald workers and negotiating new union contracts.

If you do provoke a strike, you will be astonished to learn that the people here will be even more resolute supporters of the strikers than even are the citizens of Detroit. Production, advertising and distribution will collapse. Many like me — who has been a subscriber since 1961 — will cancel their subscriptions and boycott the paper and its surviving advertisers. And where will I get my local news:

From The Coast Daily.
